The Wade Kidnap Case

CHAPTER II A THIRD NOTE "Phew! $25,000 is a lot of money to demand," Broome remarked with a gasp that Major Mosson felt to be amply justified.

"No doubt it is," Fellicie Delbos agreed. "Not that it will hurt Uncle Timothy. He'll hardly miss it. What worries me is how they are treating him. Wouldn't it be dreadful if..."

"Yes, but I've read such dreadful things of what happens when kidnapers don't get all they want. That doesn't happen in this country. I'm sure your uncle will be well treated and delivered up safely as soon as the money is paid."

Major Mosson started to say needlessly from headaches, rheumatic pain, or neuralgia. For today you can get real Aspirin... one of the fastest, safest reliefs from pain ever known...

"And unofficially?" "Although that is decidedly an unfair question it might be suggested that payment be first met and then steps taken to recover it as well as arrest the culprits."

Even though Broome was well known at the bank, it would obviously not be a simple matter to draw the money without satisfactory confirmation of which the bank's message could hardly be considered enough. This factor must have occurred to all three almost simultaneously...

It arrived the next morning so there was not long to wait, but they were left as muddled in the dark as ever.

Dear Broome, read the brief communication. No doubt you will have been surprised at recent happenings. Set your mind at rest. The money is needed for strictly personal purposes. When I am ready...

BOYS IN SERVICES SHOW THE WAY TO CIVILIANS Here, from left to right, are Airman Gilbert Timmins of Prince Edward Island, Private Hugh Wilson of Hamilton and Airman Al. Slater of Winnipeg, setting their trays at an Active Service canteen from pretty Margot Zimmerman. When she offers them sugar—which the canteen now puts up in single-teaspoonful packets—two of the boys say "No, thanks"; the third has cut his ration to a single portion. If the boys in the services are thinking before they take more—how about you?

Dorothy Dix Says—

So there you are, and there is literally nothing more true than the old proverb that says that we do not know our luck when we have it. When women think of marriage it never seems to cross their minds that it would be possible for them to miss drawing the capital prize in the matrimonial lottery. They are always sure that the men THEY married would provide them with beautiful and comfortable homes and all the luxuries in life, though Heaven knows that all about them they see their sister women whose marriage are veritable hells on earth.

GAME GETTING SCARCE Co-educational colleges also for a time offered pleasing prospects for girls. "You don't appear to have found out how those letters came to be among others delivered by the post-man in the ordinary way." Mosson flushed slightly. "By Sir Timothy for years."

enterprising maidens in search of mates, who thought that it would be a cinch to catch 'em while they were young and before they had gotten wise to the traps that would be set for them. But disappointed girls who have gone to these preserves, all armed and fixed to kill with the latest thing in lip sticks and sports clothes and even with their own cars, write me that the ground is overworked, that there are more hunches than there is game and that the boys have taken to the tall timber.

Look out you in your own office and see what luck the girls who worked with you have had in marriage. There is Sally who used to be before her marriage so gay and laughing and full of fun. The last time you saw her she was broken and aged by childbearing and cooking and washing and baby-tending and there wasn't a smile left in her. She is shabby and bedrabbled now, for she has no money to spend on clothes, with the price of meat so high and the children always needing shoes. And there was Florence who was the office fascinator, with all the men in love with her, but she is broken-hearted now because her husband has run off with another woman.
