Vocational Courses

Under the provisions of FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE AGREEMENT the Vocational School in Charlottetown is now prepared to offer a number of courses to the young people of the province.

As this is the first year in which the facilities of the School are not required for the training of veterans, the courses given will depend upon the numbers wishing to enrol.

The courses offered are as follows:

- Course 1. Carpentry. Course 2. Elementary Electricity. Course 3. Plumbing and Pipe fitting. Course 4. Blacksmithing. Course 5. Bricklaying and Plastering.

Any of the above courses having a sufficient number of applicants will commence December 1st, excepting Bricklaying and Plastering which will commence on January 4th. The courses will be of six months duration.

No tuition fees will be charged and all materials, tools and equipment required for instructional purposes will be supplied. Students taking these courses will provide their own living expenses.

Under the provisions of the YOUTH TRAINING SCHEDULE OF THE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL VOCATIONAL TRAINING AGREEMENT the following short term courses for young men and young women will be offered beginning January 4th, 1949.

Course 1. Home Management — This course will include Home management, Cooking, Sewing, Home Nursing and Health. The course will last six weeks and a second course may be offered if there are sufficient applicants.

Course 2. Agriculture — A six week course so arranged that in addition to the regular students, those interested in any particular division of the work may attend during the week it is being given.

Further announcement will be made shortly as to the subdivision of this course, the dates on which these will be given and the names of the instructors.

A COURSE lasting approximately four weeks will be given in Grading and Packing of Eggs and in Poultry and Poultry Management.

Course 3. Farm Mechanics — A four month course to include care and repair of farm machinery, tractors, cars and gas engines, harness repair, elementary electricity, pipe fitting, blacksmithing, woodworking and bricklaying.

Those who complete satisfactorily the full courses under the Youth Training Programme will receive an allowance of five dollars a week to assist in living expenses.

All courses are of an intensely practical nature and they provide a favourable opportunity for young men and women to learn a trade, improve their knowledge and train themselves for wider and more effective service.

Application forms for enrolment in any of these courses may be secured from Mr. Robert Szanella, Department of Education, Charlottetown. Please do not delay, apply at once.

Tired, Hungry and Afraid

Nothing's easier to make Than a serious mistake. —Blacky The Crow.

Blacky knows, Smart as he is, and none among the Green Forest folk is smarter, he had made serious mistakes that might have cost him his life. Some have been made through carelessness. Others have been made through error in judgement. Each mistake has taught him to be a little more suspicious of everything he isn't sure of. Blacky no longer takes anything for granted. Long ago he found out that taking things for granted is taking chances. A mistake made to make but that no one can afford. Boys and girls who take it for granted that they can get across a street safely between regular crossings are making that kind of mistake.

had been hatched to the Sunny South to spend the winter. They were tired, hungry and afraid. They had started out with other flocks from which they had become separated when those flocks were broken up and scattered by gunners. The three had finally come together and continued on their long journey hoping to find and join a flock with a wise old leader.

But it seemed as if all the flocks must have gone on ahead for as they were tired, hungry and afraid. They were tempted to fly straight to the flock and join it, but wisely they didn't. Perhaps they were a bit bashful. Perhaps they thought that they might not be welcome. They flew past, swung about, and returned coming down on the water some distance out. With heads held high they looked over to the rice and the flock of Ducks just outside it.

Flying low above the water of the Big River were three Ducks. They were fully grown but young Ducks making their first flight from the Far North where they

A BAD CHOICE!

Today's declarer could not make his contract without running some risk, but he chose the greater danger instead of the lesser.

South dealer. Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding: South West North East Pass Pass 1 North Pass 3NT Pass Pass

West opened his fourth-highest spade. South won with the nine and ran off the six club tricks, discarding one diamond, one heart and one spade from his own hand.

Now, since the heart suit was wide open, South could not well hope for another spade trick and therefore had to try the diamond finesse. When this lost it was all over — West shifted to hearts and East took the suit.

In fairness to South, he did have something to think about in the play of this deal, because, after he won with the spade nine, only seven more tricks were in plain sight, and the ninth trick would entail a risk. It is understandable that South did not want to lead a spade right back at the second trick, because the opponents might shift to hearts, with fatal result. Nevertheless, that was a better line of play than depending on the diamond finesse. Setting up a spade trick immediately could not go unless West, the obvious holder of the spade ace had at least four hearts including one of the high honors. That is to say, if West got in with the spade ace and shifted to hearts, South would not have to lose more than three tricks in the suit (which he could afford to lose) unless it was West, not East, who had the heart length.

Observe that at the cards lay, and as they figured to lie, the heart shift by West at an early stage would not jeopardize South's contract. On West's lead the ace and seven, East would play the ace and return the jack, but South would only have to duck to block the suit.

"Why do you say that?" asked another.

"Because if they hadn't they wouldn't all be resting there. Some would be swimming about. I haven't seen one of them move," replied the first one.

"Last night," said the third. "One of them is calling us."

The others listened. Sure enough, a Duck is calling.

"It isn't one of those we see," said one. "There must be others in the rice where we can't see them. That is where that call is coming from. There must be good eating in there. Let's go over there. I never before was as hungry as I am this minute."

"Me, too, said another. "What are we waiting for!" said the third impatiently.

"What are we afraid of?" said the first one.

"You may be, but I'm not," said the second, beginning to slowly swim toward the rice bed.

"What is there to be afraid of? There was any danger those ducks wouldn't be sitting still there and that one wouldn't be quacking. Imagine any one calling another into danger! If there was any danger that fellow would be telling us to keep away instead of inviting us over there. Listen! He's cooing. Let's go," said the third, beginning to swim toward the rice and the flock just outside it.

The second one started to follow but the first one hung back.

"Everything looks all right but I'm afraid," said he uneasily.

"Pooh!" exclaimed the second one.

"Pooh!" exclaimed the third one.

"Quack, quack, quack!" The three turned to see another flock coming down the Big River. The calling from the rice became louder and more coaxing than ever, but the three waited to see what the new comers would do.

The next story: "Mrs. Quack's Wisdom."
