FURTHER TAUNTS FROM GERMAN PRESS.

BERLIN, Aug. 24.—(Via London).—No further details concerning the sinking of the Arabic have been published here, and the Berlin papers refrain from comment upon the situation resulting from that event.

The newspapers publish what purports to be a brief despatch to the London Telegraph quoting Joseph P. Tumulty, President Wilson's secretary, as saying that Americans are unitedly with the President, and will, if necessary, offer their lives to maintain the inalienable rights of Americans on land and on sea.

The Kreuz Zeitung says: "These inalienable rights, as is known, consist of using British passenger steamers."

Several papers publish the Arabic's manifest on a trip from New York to London, beginning July 29, as contained in a report of the German-American Chamber of Commerce of New York. This report says that the Arabic, "which was painted like a battleship, had twelve American guardian angels aboard."

The Lokal Anzeiger says that this reports shows that the Arabic was equipped for battle, and therefore not to be considered a harmless merchantman.

The Tages Zeitung heads the London Telegraph despatch with the line "Wilson's secretary threatens."

HORSE RACES AT NEW ANNAN

Fully 3,000 people witnessed the races at New Annan Park yesterday afternoon, when a good day's sport was provided. The Free-for-all, in which there were three starters, was easy for Hilda S., the mare winning out in three straight heats. The 2.24 Trot and Pace was the race of the day, requiring five heats to decide. Arcada won out after a hard fight with Queensborough and Premier. In the Three-minute Trot and Pace Queen Catherine won in three straight heats. At the finish of the third heat of the 2.24 class a serious accident was narrowly averted. The first three horses had finished, King Brazilian and Zealot were some distance in the rear, when James Gillis, of Kensington, attempted to cross the track in front of King Brazilian. He was thrown down, the horse falling on top of him. Luckily Gillis escaped with a few slight cuts on the forehead. DAIRY WISDOM

Paste This up in Your Dairy Stable

The dairy department of the Wisconsin College of Agriculture is urging that the following be pasted up in every dairy barn:

"Practice the following advice and you will make more dollars in dairring. Others have done it. Why can't you?

"Use pure-bred dairy sires from cows having large and profitable productions of milk and butter-fat.

"Raise well the heifer calves from cows which for one or more generations have made large and profitable productions of milk and butter-fat.

"Breed heifers at the age of 16 to 20 months.

"Feed heifers liberally and milk regularly.

In Summer Time

"Do not try to save feed by turning to pasture too early.

"Provide plenty of pure, fresh water, shade and protection against flies during hot weather.

"Supplement poor pastures with corn silage or green soiling crops like rye, peas, oats, green corn fodder, cabbage and other available feed.

In Winter Time

"Feed cows daily one pound of grain for every three pounds of milk produced, 25 to 40 pounds of corn silage, and what clover or alfalfa hay they will eat.

Do not turn cows out to remain and suffer in cold, stormy weather.

"Allow them to have water which is not colder than that from a deep well twice or three times daily.

"Brush cows daily if you can possibly find the time, for it pays better than does grooming of horses which as a rule is not neglected.

"Keep cows in clean, well-lighted, properly-ventilated stables.

Endless Talk

"He gave an excellent account of himself in that battle."

"I don't know about that, but he has been giving an excellent account of the affairr ever since."

DAY.

Day-
Faster and more fast,
O'er night's brim, day boils at last;
Boils, pure gold, o'er the cloud-cup's brim
Where spurting and surpassed it lay,
For not a frothflake touched the rim
Of yonder gap in solid gray
Of the eastern cloud, an hour away;
But forth one wavelet, then another, curled,
Till the whole sunrise, not to be suppressed,
Rose, reddened, and its seething breast
Flickered in bounds, grew gold, then overflowing the world.

Oh, Day, if I squander a wavelet of thee,
A mite of my twelve-hours' treasure,
The test of thy gazes of glances,
(Be thy grants thou art bound to or gifts above measure),
One of thy choices or one of thy chances
(Be they tasks God imposed three or freeks at thy pleasure)—
My Day, if I squander such labor or leisure,
Then shame fall on Asolo, mischief on me!

Thy long blue solemn hours serenely flowing,
Whence earth, we feel, gets steady help and good—
Thy fitful sunshine-minutes, coming, going,
As if earth turned from work in gamesome mood—
All shall be mine!

THE HISTORY OF FASHION.

Fashion is a social custom, transmitted by imitation or by tradition; it is a form of luxury in ornamentation; the caprices of fashion are both frequent and sudden; it is changeable, unreliable, frivolous, and thrusts aside the most careful calculations; it domineers its universal following, reigning supreme over all classes of society in which the taste for finery dates well back. Such is the declaration made by M. Pierre Clerget, director of the High School of Commerce, Lyons, France, in a recent publication of the Smithsonian Institution.

Up to the thirteenth century, says M. Clerget, women's costumes were chiefly tunics or robes marked by natural simplicity, but in France in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, under Francis I. and Henry II., dresses were designed to follow the natural lines. Women then appeared in fitted doublets, skirts, and wraps with collars. The sleeves were leg-of-mutton and balloon shaped, filled with plaits or very tight. At the time of Henry III. the pointed waist was held in place by a stiff corset, and was accompanied by puffed sleeves, the dress already having the hoop-petticoat.

The reign of Henry IV. brought out the great bell skirt built on springs, which later was found with the crinline. The tendency towards fulness in the skirt kept increasing until 1605 bringing some dresses to enormous proportions. Then toward the end of the seventeenth century the fullness diminished, giving way to padded dresses worn under mantle wraps, though reappearing again later. Reduction in the size of the skirt continued until about 1750, when fullness again came into fashion, and by 1785 the skirts were ridiculously full and expanded with great hoops. There was another reaction and the hoop skirt gave way, first to the bustle and then, in 1763, to the one-piece dress, with no ornamentation. Greek robes were seen at fetes and on the stage. The directoire dress exaggerated the plaited style and resembled the trousers skirt of recent date. The empire costume with the high waist was another transformation of the directoire, showing a tendency to fullness in the form.

In 1805 there came a more general style for all classes. Skirts were worn very full again toward 1810, and after passing through all sorts of graduations, with a partial return to fullness in the back, this style ended between 1860 and 1865 in the culminating point of the crinoline. This marked the departure from orientalism and brought us toward the epoch of simple and straight robes, which continued until the extreme clinging gowns were reached, while today we seem about to revert again to a more voluminous style of dress.

The modiste seeks out the designs, fits the forms, harmonizes the lines and styles, exhibits the models and then the selections are made by public opinion.

Fashion has affected many industries, causing a great increase or decrease in the demand for various articles. It has originated one industry and done away with another by displacing its products; at the same time it has impeded the new one by demanding immediate results regardless of the cost of installation of new machinery and new materials. ...

Despite its abuses and demands says M. Xlerget in conclusion, it seems that we cannot do without fashion. It has become a study, and is approaching an art. The appearance of a new style of garment is a visible sign that a transformation is taking place in the intellect, customs, and business of a people; the rise of nations has been so indicated, making fashion a subject of ethnologic interest. It also has been remarked that where the same style of clothing has been used for centuries, as among barbarous peoples, civilization remains practically stationary, but on the other hand, in Europe one sees evidences of great comfort and rapid progress in the evolutions of fashion, marking a state of high civilization.

For Recruiting Officers

Farmer (to one of his laborers, who has come home after his training in the militia)—"Which would you rather be, a soldier or a farmhand, Paddy?"

Pat—"A soldier, of course."

Farmer—"And why so, Paddy?"

Pat—"Well, you see, you'd be a long time working for a farmer before he'd tell you to stand at ease."
