Nostalgic Romance Captured
In The Great "Dan Patch"

Millions of people too young to have known or heard of him, and millions of people who knew and revered him, will see the romantic "turn of the century" story of America's wonder horse, Dan Patch captured in all its movement and excitement in the motion picture, "The Great Dan Patch," which was recently made in Hollywood by W. R. Frank.

The film, a United Artists release, due Thursday at the Prince Edward Theatre, co-stars Dennis O'Keefe, Gail Russell, Ruth Warrick and Charlotte Greenwood, with Henry Hull, John Hoyt, Arthur Hunnicutt and the Negro singer, Clarence Muse, in supporting roles. They all play parts based on people actually involved in the thrilling Dan Patch saga.

John Taintor Foote, famous author of horse stories, wrote and produced the film for Mr. Frank. Foote spent more than three years in research to develop his script from first-hand knowledge gained by viewing old films showing races and exhibition miles paced by the wonder horse, Dan Patch. He also had access to material filed by the M. W. Savage estate, which owned the horse.

The executive producer of the picture, W. R. Frank, comes from Minnesota, and is a longtime friend of the Savage family, who are also Minnesotans. Frank's first love for Dan Patch began in 1905, when he saw the horse pace the mile at the Minnesota State Fair in 1855. In the intervening years, Frank grew up to become a prominent motion picture exhibitor and distributor, and when he came to Hollywood seven years ago his major project was to produce a picture based on the career of the famed pacer.

Impersonating the great Dan Patch on the screen is another wonder horse called Visalia Abbe, which was discovered on the Craig Cimarron Ranch near Phoenix, Arizona. With the exception of the crooked hind legs, identification mark of Patch, Visalia Abbe resembles his famous predecessor almost minutely.

The John Taintor Foote script covers the life and times of Dan Patch from the time he was foaled by Zelica, and carries Patch through his career until his last exhibition mile in Los Angeles in 1910.

"The Great Dan Patch" was directed by Joe Newman, with Lewis J. Rachmil in charge of production. Gilbert Warrenton served as cameraman.

There was only one Dan Patch, the greatest race horse that ever lived.
