DON'T TALK BEFORE CHILDREN.

The parents who do the most groaning about 'small pitchers' are the ones who take least pains as to what they say and do in the presence of children.

Most of us do not credit youngsters with the intelligence of the pet dog or cat. We announce with pride of the latter,' 'He knows everything you say,' but will calmly talk scandal or discuss the small child to his face, with the consoling belief that he doesn't understand.

Grown people would save themselves much mortification if they did not bank so strongly on the infant lack of understanding. 'My muvver says yeo don't take enuf baffs, and so does Auntie Meg,' lisped a two-year-old child who had apparently been in the room throughout a caustic conversation between the grown-ups on a friend's lack of cleanliness. 'Don't tell me that child does not understand,' said a friend to a doting mother who was heralding her little one's beauty and cleverness. 'Look at that conscious smirk.'
