was finality in the words.

For a full moment they looked at each other. He could not fathom her, so he turnd away. In the distance, gray veiled with mist, he saw the dogs and the sled. The figure of the Cree loomed ghostly, as he mushed along, urging his team. They had ascended a little rise and were disappearing over its edge. O'Hara had no time to lose if he meant to overtake them yet he scarcely had taken a dozen steps when he heard her voice behind him and suddenly felt her hand on his sleeve.

"You're taking him — to prison?" she choked, her eyes following the track of the sled runners in the snow.

O'Hara stood still, looking down at her. Even in that Artic light her beauty was radiant, she was so near he could feel her warm breath on his cheek. Suddenly she lifted her eyes to his with a new and pitiful appeal. "The evidence you have against him, m'sieur; it—t's circumstantial?"

"Entirely! Must be in a case like this, Mrs. Gharian. It is sufficient, though."

"Oh mon Dieu" she cried catching at his sleeve, "don't do it, don't let him suffer on that! He might—might be innocent!"

O'Hara smiled grimly. "He'll have a chance to prove that at the trial.

Her hand fell from his arm and she shrank back, dumb. If she had a secret she meant to keep it. O'Hara drew a glove from his breast and held it out to her.

"Yours?" he asked quietly.

She took it and the color leaped into her face. "You—you found this, m'sieur?"

"At French Pete's where you dropped it under the table the other night."

She was startled. She flushed staring at the glove, then suddenly, she hid her face upon it, and breaking down in sudden and violent weeping, fled from him into the cabin.

So you've brought in Creuse as the only suspect, and you've covered the ground up there thoroughly; that's the long and short of your report, then O'Hara?"

"The whole of it so far, Inspector."

Macdonald turned around in his chair and eyed the sergeant sharply. "What ails the bunch of you?" he asked tersely. "What the devil's got into this cake? You're like Johnson, now; You're holding something back!"

O'Hara's face crimsoned. "I'm asking leave to check up on it further Inspector. If I can clear up one or two points I'll lay it all before you. If I don't," he drew a letter from his pocket, "I'll resign. I'd like to leave this with you, sir. If I don't report in six days, open it!"

His chief took the sealed envelope and looked at it curiously, then he glanced up at his subordinate's set face. Something had happened to O'Hara. He looked older, more worn; there was even a sag in his ordinarily erect, confident bearing.

Macdonald carefully pigeonho'ed the letter. Then he struck his heavy hand on the desk. "You're planning some dare-devil risk, Sergeant, and leaving this in case of your death. Very well! You men have to take chances, but you're a good officer and I don't want to lose you. I'll give you an assistant. Who do you want?"

"No one, sir!" O'Hara's voice was harsh. "No one can do what I've got in mind. I'd like to finish this job myself, Inspector."

"Then go ahead; you've got orders. If you need more expense money it's here. If you're not back in six days, I'll—" He did not finish but nodded at the envelope which showed conspicuously in its pigeonhole.

Once again he turned his searching eyes on the sergeant and could have sworn O'Hara winced. Yet the officer's weather bronzed face and his tight shut lips were calm as he saluted at the door. A moment later it shut behind him and his chief was alone.

CURRY-HUGHES WEDDING

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer on August 14, 1947, when Zita Jean Hughes, R.N., daughter of John H. Hughes and the late Mrs. Hughes of Charlottetown, became the bride of Walter John, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Kazimierez Curry of Whitemouth, Manitoba. Rev. Father W. J. MacCardle officiated at the ceremony.

To the strains of the Wedding March, which was played by Mr. Alex MacLean, the bride, given in marriage by her father, entered the church on the arm of her father and looked charming in a floor length dress of white satin with fitted bodice, gathered skirt and long pointed sleeves. Her fingertip veil of illusion net fell from a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses. Her only ornament was a gold cross and chain, a gift of the groom.

The bridesmaid, Bernadette, younger sister of the bride wore a floor length dress of pink taffeta with matching headdress. She carried a bouquet of white carnations. Mrs. Wilfrid J. McIsaac, sister of the bride was Matron of Honor. She wore a floor length dress of grey crepe with mulberry accessories. She carried a nosegay of sweet peas and snapdragon.

The groom was supported by Mr. Herbert Hughes, cousin of the bride. Messrs. Lorne Hennessey and Ralph DeCoste were the ushers. Miss Frances Hennessey rendered beautifully several hymns.

Following the ceremony a delightful wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride to relatives and intimate friends. Rev. Father McCardle proposed the toast to the bride which was responded to by the groom.

The happy couple left on a honeymoon trip to Lake of the Woods, Ontario and then on a visit to the groom's home at Whitemouth, Manitoba. For travelling the bride chose a blue suit and top coat with black accessories.

Out of town guests were: Helen Curry, Whitemouth, Manitoba,; Gladys Hughes, Montreal; Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McIsaac and family, Halifax; Mrs. Daniel F. Hughes, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; Mrs. Harold Boyle and son, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

The bride is a graduate of the Charlottetown Hospital School of Nursing. The groom served with the Royal Canadian Navy in World War II.

The happy couple will reside at Sherbrooke Street, Winnipeg.

Best wishes are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Curry.

PRINCESS PATS TO ORGANIZE WAR MUSEUM AT CALGARY

The Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry — Canada's famed "Princess Pat's" regiment — has announced its plans for the organization of a new regimental museum at Calgary, Alta. The work of cataluguing and conditioning exhibits has already been started by Lt. G. R. Kelly although actual construction of the museum proper has not as yet commenced.

The regiment already maintains a World War I museum. It is intended to create rooms of exhibits where records and souvenirs of the regiment's many engagements in two world wars will be kept for posterity.

The "Princess Pat's" fought with great distinction in World War I and, in World War II as part of the 1st Canadian Infantry Division, the Regiment battled its way through both the Sicilian and Italian campaigns. Later in Northwest Europe, it was in the fight from the time of the famed Rhine Crossing until VE-Day.

TIPS OFFERED ON BOUQUETS

Bridal bouquets should complement the bride's figure type as well as her wedding gown, say beauty experts.

The statesque girl can carry an armful of flowers without running the risk of appearing dwarfed by it. This arm bouquet is better if carried at a slant to break the long line of her figure.

But when an armful of flowers may overwhelm the petite bride. Better choice for her, say our mentors, is a spray or shower bouquet arranged in proportion to her figure size. Such a bouquet creates the illusion of greater height. If she wishes to carry a white prayer book, she can add satin streamers and sprays of small flowers such as lilies of the valley. Or she can play up her petite beauty with a tiny, round old-fashioned bouquet of the nosegay type.

FLYING MILKMAIDS

You've heard about Britain's mobile milkmaids, girls of the Women's Land Army who go from farm to farm to relieve the seven-day-week strain on the regular dairy workers . . . well, here's a story of two flying-milkmaids! They're Irish colleens Margaret and Maureen McCabe from County Wicklow, and they arrived in England recently accompanying a prize winning herd of cattle which was brought over by their English owner.

Three planes brought 16 cows, 7 heifers and a prize-winning bull. Reason for the flight was that the cows are all due to calve this month, so the sooner they were settled in their new surroundings, the better. The McCabe sisters went along to look after them. Twenty-six-year-old Margaret and 20-year-old Maureen were thrilled at the idea of their first air trip, but didn't find it as exciting as they'd anticipated. In some ways though they were quite relieved - - - seems they'd expected the bull would be troublesome, but he just - - - lay down and went to sleep!

Milk is very precious in Britain these days - - - so the flying herd was extra welcome!
