CANADIANS MUST FOREGO LUXURIES

CABINET MINISTERS APPEAL FOR ECONOMY. REDUCE LUXURIES BY 75 PER CENT.

Both Sir Thomas White and Sir George Foster have given out statements impressing upon Canadians the lessons of the Lloyd George declaration. "Consume 75 per cent. less of luxuries and 25 per cent. less of the essentials of living," is a message from the Finance Minister. "It shall shake us all out of our complacency," say the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Epoch Making Speech

The Minister of Finance, Sir Thos. White, said that the speech of Mr. Lloyd George was a wonderful epoch-marking utterance, one of the greatest if not the greatest, in Parliamentary history. "There can be no doubt," said the minister, "that the principles laid down by the British Premier are thoroughly sound and essential, having regard to the situation with which Great Britain is confronted at the present time. Two conditions have been chiefly responsible for the drastic action proposed. The first is the shortage of ocean tonnage, and the second is the state of sterling exchange. From the latter, which is a financial standpoint, it is the true policy of Great Britain to import only those essential things which she must have and cannot produce at home in sufficient quantity for herself and her allies whom she is helping to finance. These things will be found to be principally foodstuffs and munitions. She must find money abroad to pay for such of these as she purchases abroad. That is to say, for example, she must find money in Canada and in United States to pay for the munitions, grain and other foodstuffs which she needs from this continent. She cannot pay for these imports which have became so greatly increased over the normal, by her exports. The balance must be paid for in gold or from the proceeds of loans made on this side of the Atlantic To ease the drain of gold and improve sterling exchange conditions as well as to conserve cargo space in ocean merchantment, the importation of such commodities as Great Britain can supply herself, and of luxuries which are non-essentials is to be banned."

The Same for Canada

The minister said further that the general lines of the policy laid down by the British Prime Minister were as sound for Canada today as for Great Britain. There is great need for increased production especially of agricultural production. There is great need for the abolition of waste and the right limitation of luxurious expenditure. In connection with the question as to whether an embargo should be placed against the importation into Canada of luxuries, it is to be pointed out that many of these articles come from France and Italy and are covered by treaties between Canada and these countries. For example the convention between France and Canada of 1908 provides for fixed rates of customs duties upon a range of articles of luxurious expenditure, including table luxuries, wines, embroideries, velvets, ribbons and manufacturers of silk.

"The problem for Canada," said the minister, "is to greatly increase production and cut down luxurious expenditures. The need for national saving is imperative. Canada's war expenditures are increasing and for hereiomosGvef9zes Great Britain must have money here for her purchases of foodstuffs and munitions in Canada. Every citizen should save his money and have it available for the Dominion's war loans. If this is done to the extent of Canada's ability we shall be able to finance our own war expenditure in Canada and find for Great Britain every dollar she needs to expend here. Putting the matter another way, we can get orders from Great Britain for all the munitions and other supplies we can produce in Canada, providing we can lend Great Britain the money to pay the purchase price to the Canadian producers. This can be done only by national saving. It is a time for self-sacrifice and a time for self-denial."

Remarks on its Frankness

Sir George Foster said:—"The policy outlined by the British Prime Minister in his speech is a drastic and significant one and marks an epoch in the conduct of the gigantic war which has raged for more than two and a half years. It is significant for the frankness with which it deals with the whole situation and, taken in conjunction with the speech by Sir Edward Carson, delivered a few days ago, on the naval situation, for the illuminating publicity shed upon the war situation for the information alike of friend and enemy.

"No doubt the Kaiser and his echoes will seize upon the lucid and intimate statements as proof of the efficacy of their previous and especially of their latest war methods, and use them to stimulate the flagging energies of his people. But is, as is no doubt, it brings home at once to the United Kingdom and the Empire at large the gravity of the situation and shakes us all out of our complacent feeling within which we were entrenching ourselves, and which has been fostered by copious headlines which display as victories the wrenching of a few yards of trenches from the enemy here and there, it will have accomplished the purpose which, I have no doubt, the Prime Minister intended by bringing us face to face with the verities of the situation. This will far outweigh any temporary encouragement accruing to the enemy.

"That it will discourage the people of the United Kingdom, is not in the least degree probable; rather will it sharpen their grit and determination and key every nerve and energy to the point of ultimate victory—a victory which, however, it is shown, can only be achieved through prodigious efforts and the widest self-sacrifice.

Needed in Outer Empire

"I hope it will have a similar effect upon the people of the Empire outside the United Kingdom, who, despite all that they have done in the number of men sent to the front and the splendid subsidary work and support which have followed enlistments, have not yet come to a full appreciation of the grave issues involved, but to whom when they understand, Mr. Lloyd George's appeal, will come and not in vain for an equal self-sacrifice to that demanded of the people of the United Kingdom

"The speech reveals the wonderful share of the burdens of this war which are being borne by the people of Great Britain on land and sea, and the valuable and essential part played therein by the British Fleet, and the British mercantile marine. British tonnage has to do commercial service of a very large and esesntial kind for France and Italy, especially and to a great extent for Russia also, while at the same time it provides an immense aid to the Navy in guarding the seas and blockading Germany and at the same time ministers to the food necessities and commercial requirements of her own people.

"This will be a revelation to the majority of the people of the Empire who have hitherto looked upon the British mercantile marine as chiefly devoted to its normal Empire work. It was well that this revelation was given coincident with the work and results of the German submarine campaign as it shows antecedent causes other than those arising from submarine warfare as chief factors in the present scarcity of tonnage.

"There is no attempt to blink the submarine menace, and why should there be? The people of Britain are at their best when they face the whole facts of a situation, and it is always the wiser course to take the great body of people with you than for the Government to "go it alone" with the public restricted to the narrower and inadequate basis of information.

Will Rise to the Demand

"As to the results of the new restrictions placed upon imports, the people of the British Isles will be the most affected and it is they who will be called upon to make the greatest sacrifice and practice the fullest self-denial. Every family in Britain will be affected and almost every normal business as well. The industries and profits of producers will be interfered with, many occupations and businesses will be diminished almost to the vanishing point, and great dislocation, deprivation and loss will ensue. The grim qualities of war as affecting non-combatants will be fully demonstrated nd their realization will put the nation in its wildest sense on a war footing and teach the great lesson of necessary co-operation between the man at home and the man in the trench. There is no doubt that the British spirit will rise to the demand and the hands of the Government in its courageous policy.

"The restriction of imports will also affect the Overseas Dominions and Canada more perhaps than any. In many respects we shall be unable to get supplies of raw or partly manufactured material which we have been in habit of getting from Great Britain for our industries. What can be given will no doubt come through, but many of our occupations and industries will be more or less seriously affected. But there will be nothing which cannot be borne. In many lines our exports will be cut down. In the matter of timber and fruits and fish and agricultural implements we shall be most largely affected, but on the other hand all our staple food supplies will be required to the maximum of our production, and we shall cheerfully make the best of the situation, sustained by the feeling that in sharing the troubles and sacrifices, we are more intimately associating ourselves with the Mother Country and the Empire at large in the common purpose of war.

Sacrifice Pleasure

"I wish it could so work out that we in Canada would do what we have not yet begun to do, namely to sacrifice some of our pleasures and indulgence and expensive and unnecessary modes of living and so keep pace voluntarily here with what becomes compulsory in the Mother Country. Later—and perhaps not very much later, it may become compulsory here, for it surely is not right for us to diminish by extravagant and wasteful methods of living and by declining to submit ourselves to restrictions which touch no esesntial point of health or real comfort, the precious and essential supply of food and other materials that are becoming so necessary to the success of the war.

"We further mfgut surely reflect that the high cost of living, depending as it does essentially on limited supply compared with demand, could be essentially reduced, in the general living of the country the more affluent were to consume 75 per cent. less of luxuries and 25 per cent. less of the essentials of living. The abstentions would not affect us in health of body or clarity of mind of peace of conscience, whilst they would lessen the cost of living generally by adding to the supply of the community, and would reinforce the reservoir of what Britain and the Allies now and for many months to come will so much need. Of all the possessions of the Empire, Canada lies geographically in the economic line of supply under present conditions of transport, and every pound of food supply added to the common fund materially lightens Britains problem of feeding her people.

"Lloyd George has struck the right note of the war—it will enter loyal ear and will appeal to every loyal heart within the Empire. The first shudder at the grave situation revealed will be succeeded by a courage and determination, armed by a knowledge of the real truth, which will work its will to victory with sure and certain steps."

A NARROW ESCAPE

Mrs. Frank Weir has received the following letter from her son in France, who is attached to the 29th Battalion 11th Brigade:

27, 1917.

Somewhere in France,

Dear Mother:—

I received your postal order O. K. and was very much pleased with it. After this when you send money just send the Canadian bill, they are a lot easier changed.

Everything is pretty quiet around here now, and we are having a good easy time which pays up for the Somme fight. That's the place, that kept you dodging quite lively. There was one day the 25th of Nov. I thought my time had come. I was standing close to my horse, when a shell came killed my horse and four others, also wounding three, but as luck would have it we all got home safely. For two months now I never have heard or seen a shell and I think the time is close now, when all guns will cease to fire death tolls.

This is all I have to say at present, so Good-Bye.

I remain your,
Loving son,
ANGUS.

COMPLETE LIST OF PROHIBITED GOODS

OTTAWA, March 5.— The full list of articles prohibited from importation into Great Britain was received by the Trade & Commerce Department yesterday. The prohibition is of course, not absolute, that is, the articles mentioned below may be sent to Great Britain under license, application for which should be made through the department here. The articles are; agricultural machinery; Antimony ware; apparel not waterproof, except boots and shoes; works of art; baskets, and basket ware; printed books, and other printed matter, including posters, daily and weekly, and other perodical and publications otherwise than in single copies through mail; boots and shoes of leather and leather materials; brandy; clocks; Cloisonne ware; prepared and raw cocoa; coffee; cotton hosiery; cotton; lace, and articles; curios; diatomite, and infusorial earth; embroidery and needlework; fancy goods, known as Paris goods; ornamental and down feathers; fire extinguishers, artificial flowers; fresh flowers; raw fruit of all descriptions, except lemons and bitter oranges; photographs, and maps; painted and gilt ware; live quail; quebrachs, hemlock, oak, and mangrove extracts; rum; canned salmon; manufacturers of silk, yarn not included; manufactures of silks, and furs; Soya beans; stereoscopes, straw envelopes for bottles; straw plaiting; sugar articles; and preparations containing sugar, except condensed milk, Tea; Tomatoes, Typewriters; Wine; Wood and lumber of all kinds hewn, sawn or split, planed or dressed.

CHARMING AFTERNOON GOWN,

A charming little daytime frock which for once is not plaited but tucked is of light gray chiffon over silk. The skirt is laid in four deep encircling tucks, which take up the lower half of it. Two extra little tucks are placed above, at the side breadths only. The simple little bodice is crossed, both front and back, by wide scarf drapery of chiffon, which fastens each side at the waist line with two round buttons. These, like the simple sailor collar with rounded ends, are embroidered with sparkling coral colored beads giving a very attractive note of color. So is the tight little cuff of the unlined bishop sleeves, which fall so prettily from the arm of the wearer. Demurely simple and yet extremely smart this would be a delightful gown for a girlish wearer at the dansant or any afternoon function.

CHESS TOURAMENT

The first week of the Annual Tournament of the Charlottetown Chess Club closed on Saturday.

A number of hotly contested games were run off with varying results. The former champions are not finding things by any means easy and at the present standing of the contestants it looks as if a dark horse might win the trophy this year.

As was anticipated some of the junior players are showing up in strong form and if the trophy is not won this year by one of them it will no doubt be in the near future.

This quality of the Chess played this year shows a very marked improvement over that of former years, and a good many of the stronger players may now be ranked high among amateurs.

Chess is a curious game and its votaries have their ups and downs sometimes in extraordinary fashion All sorts of explanations are given for unexpected defeats, liver, nerves, noises etc. Perhaps one of the most curious reasons given by one player on receiving a most unexpected fillup was that his queen had been stolen during the day.

The tournament will continue on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at the Club room at the Royal Bank till finished. Every visitor is welcome.
