Powell, Skelton, Dorsey Click In "Ship Ahoy"

Eleanor Powell keeps up the pace of her inimitable tap dancing with unique new routines in "Ship Ahoy," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer musical which opened yesterday at the Capitol Theatre. The charming Miss Powell, who has been called the world's greatest female tap dancer by the Dancing Masters of America, does not carry the burden alone. Red Skelton is in there pitching laughs, and Tommy Dorsey's top-flight band provides scintillating melody. Red Cross Unit Of North Bedouque Community Club

The final regular meeting for the year of the Red Cross Unit of North Bedouque Community Club was held at the home of Mrs. Heath Clark on the afternoon of Nov. 18. Seventeen ladies were present and two quilts were made. The presentation of two quilts was made to Mrs. D. F. Hoddinott, Secretary of the Unit. Mrs. James MacDonnell read an appreciative address and expressed regret that Mrs. Hoddinott would soon leave for Newcastle, N.B., where her husband will become minister of the United Church of Canada. Mrs. Hoddinott replied with feeling, thanking the Society for their thoughtfulness. The annual meeting for election of officers and reports will be held at the home of Mr. Alban Locky sometime in January. $5.00 was voted to be sent to the Hospital for Sick Children in London, Eng. A collection of $4.00 was received following the serving of supper which preceded the business period. A vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Clark for entertaining the unit. God Save The King was sung in closing. Finished work included the following articles: 1 quilt donated by Mrs. James E. MacDonnell; 1 quilt donated by the Community Club and sewed by Mrs. Ralph MacCaul; 2 babies' jackets; 1 aero cap; 1 pr. boys' stockings. Donations of money are to be received by Mrs. MacDonnell, President and Mrs. Preston Bonness, Treasurer immediately as a further contribution to Red Cross work.—S.

INTEREST IN NUTRITION

The Refresher Course in Nutrition which opened yesterday morning at the Charlottetown is stimulating much interest in that timely topic. The Charlottetown Home Economists' Association have a membership of 12, but last night the Public Health Nurses and trained home economists living outside the City brought the attendance up to 24. To-morrow they will study the planning of meals, buying and preparation of foods. Miss Francis Mackay of Winthrop, Manitoba, who is conducting the course, presents the subject in a most interesting and practical manner.

KILLED ABOARD CARRIER

Ray Moore of Los Angeles, 1st Lt. U.S. Army, was killed in action somewhere in the Pacific. He was paymaster on an American naval craft. He was the son of the late Dr. G. E. F. Moore of Crapaud, and is survived by his wife and mother, also a brother Bertram who is serving in the American Army.

SOCIAL EVENING

A very enjoyable evening was spent on Wednesday November 11th, when friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Williams, Cornwall, to tender a shower of honour to Miss Dorothy Good whose marriage to Mr. MacPhail, took place recently. To the strains of the Wedding March, played by Miss Leah MacKinley, Dorothy was escorted to the seat of honour by Mrs. Earl Moore and Miss Marion MacEachern two former school mates. Miss Phyllis Walker and Miss Isabel Howard assisted in opening gifts. Miss Marion MacEachern read the accompanying verses. Dorothy, in her charming manner, thanked her friends and extended an invitation to all to visit her in her new home. She was the son of the late Dr. G. E. F. Moore of Crapaud, and is survived by his wife and mother, also a brother Bertram who is serving in the American Army.

Stranger In Shady Gulch

By Denver Bardwell

(CHAPTER XXXIV) Radkin leaped onto his horse. From the saddle, he spoke to Scooter and Hattaway. "The guns try to get to the Half Diamond to see what happened to Arlene and Mr. Waller. You two stay here and help finish scattering those fellows down under. If they give up and make for the Half Diamond, keep after 'em!"

He kicked the flanks of his horse, and galloped away toward the south with a streaking after him. Ahead, he saw the last of Hasser's men scooting toward the trail that led down to the lowland. It would be a matter of course, to take that route himself, while it was still gutted with the enemy. He must try to find some other cut by which to descend from the mesa.

A couple of miles of fast riding along the rim finally brought him to a likely descent. As he plunged his mount down the declivity, he glanced northward toward the scene of battle.

He was surprised by what he saw. Several men were fleeing westward toward the Half Diamond headquarters, while other men on foot were running here and there after what was left of the horses. They were the attackers. That seemed the only explanation of the sudden riot and retreat. He wondered whether Thomas Lally had escaped ahead of his men, and had little doubt that he had.

It was poor comfort to know that his seven horsemen were efforts to move the hides when that abandonment meant that he alone would have to face them shortly on their own ground. He had some hope of reaching the ranch house ahead of them, even though this new horse he was riding had racer blood. They were following a well-ridden trail while he would have to travel over un-cleared ground. They would surely beat him. Nevertheless, he was determined to go on. He would dare anything for Arlene's sake.

He had fixed the location of the ranch house before starting down from the heights and once he reached the low country, he set his course straight toward it, spurring his racer into a proof of what he could do. He swept his eyes about a quarter of a mile away from the headquarters, at a spot on the trail that led to the Thumbs Creek cavern, a large number of riders and horses were congregated. Evidently coming from the direction of the cavern were pulling up as they reached the assembly. Many men were scattered about the low country, he set his eyes on them as they came. Then, coming up on a rise of ground, he suddenly slowed down mystified by the spectacle that met his eyes. Then, coming up on a rise of ground, he suddenly slowed down mystified by the spectacle that met his eyes.

Then Radkin saw the other men scattered around the large, roughly furnished room. There were Jerry Holcomb and half a dozen men. "Take cover, Bill!" Burpee advised, backing up against the wall. "And you better get your dog away from that window. Duke, Hasser and young Tom Lally are out in the barn, throw 'em lead at us!"

Radkin obeyed. Jerry Holcomb spoke, waving a hand toward a tall, brawny man who wore a gold badge on which were the words, "High Sheriff." "Radkin, this is Sheriff Pat Glover. We and our men were on our way here from San Jacinto to see about those hides, when Mer Burpee and the man Sheriff Oids had sent to hurry us before he was killed last night. We came on here as fast as we could. We've got Lally and two of his men under grand in a back room, but his son and foreman are out in the barn, putting up a fight with their guns. Some of our men are out beyond the corral, to keep 'em from escaping; that way, and others are out on the trail, a-baiting Lally's other men as they come in. Just then, an a-z-y fellow came from one corner of the room, and Radkin turned to see, for the first time that Mark Waller was seated there, his hands apparently tied behind his back.

"Tell 'em about my girl, blast you!" Waller roared. "He'll go out and get those devils who are holding her! He ain't scared like the rest of you!" The rancher turned to the sheriff, turned to Radkin. "Son, Duke Hasser and the infernal Tom Lally have got Arlene out in the barn, threatening to kill her if we don't get 'em get away! These yellow cowards here tied me up to keep me from getting after her. But you'll do som'—I know you will! Go get her, Radkin! Save my girl!" (To Be Continued)

EVEN IN THE CARDS THERE'S NO MAN FOR ME...

You have to perspire — You don't have to offend! It doesn't take a fortune-teller to foretell that romance will never come to a girl with "B.O." For nothing so surely betrays a lack of personal cleanliness: "B.O." can happen to anyone. We all perspire and perspiration left on your skin soon becomes stale, unpleasant. "B.O." is the result! That is why we all need Lifebuoy—the ONE soap especially made to PREVENT "B.O." No other popular soap contains Lifebuoy's special deodorizing ingredient—no other soap can keep you so safe from offending. And a bath with Lifebuoy's rich, stimulating lather leaves you feeling on top of the world. Lifebuoy's GRAND for face and hands, too—20% MILDER than many so-called beauty and baby soaps.

more, we could and should contribute more to the T.B. League of Prince Edward Island so that we can regain lost ground. Aren't we as good as the Russians? A few years ago our death rate from T.B. was below 60 per 100,000, now it is 75. Can't we lower it again? There could be and should be more T.B. nurses going around among the T.B. cases in this province. There was money to pay them. Let us then follow Prince Edward Islanders put another bright star in our glorious coronet of duties well done. Let us give the T.B.
