It was then we learned that "absence makes the heart grow fonder." But happily you have been spared to return to us, and since then you have surely proven to us that in handling the rifle, you had not forgotten how to handle the bow. Now, we might carry on this subject for a long period, but after forsook everything that life held dear to you to serve your King and Country, during the Great War, it is in this stetch robe, not for its intrinsic value but as a slight token of our esteem and friendship for you. In closing we wish yourself, M. S. MacDonald and many other good wishes from your friends of South Lake and elsewhere.
