

WHEN YOU STAY OVERNIGHT...

... SAY Thank you with flowers

Flowers are a most acceptable way of saying "Thanks" on all occasions. And they are a simple way. For flowers are the only gift that is intimate enough for your closest friend... yet correct for a casual acquaintance. When you send flowers—you're right.

IN MEMORIAM

MR. THOMAS McADAM

There passed peacefully to his eternal reward on November 4th at the residence of his son Thomas McAdam, 75 Bayfield St., Charlottetown, Mr. Thomas McAdam of Donagh in his eighty-sixth year. Mr. McAdam spent the most part of his life on his farm in Donagh, but about eight years ago, he relinquished his old home to his son, Fred, and with his wife moved to the City and has since resided with his son Thomas.

The deceased was a man of a very gentle nature, quiet and unassuming in his manner, but gifted with a pleasing personality which made friends with old and young alike. He was an excellent provider and did not spare himself in anyway in order to furnish his home and family with the best that could be obtained.

He was an excellent cook and for a number of years was employed in this capacity with the Charlottetown Steam Navigation Co., the Earl Grey and the Earl Foy, where through his ability and strict attention to duty, combined with his skill in supplying the needs and comforts to others, made him a general favorite to his officers and fellow employees.

Although he lost three of his family in the past years, his married life was a grand success, and nine years ago he celebrated his golden wedding and had he lived a few months longer would have celebrated his sixtieth anniversary. During his illness, he was frequently visited by his pastor, Fr. Baines, C.S.S.R. of the Holy Redeemer Parish who also one ad- opted daughter, Mrs. Leo Robbins, Pembroke, Ont.

The pallbearers were Francis Trainor, Patrick Trainor, Lawrence Heron, Patrick Gallant, Joseph Holland and Lucius Kelly. Numerous Mass cards, messages of sympathy and floral tributes were received by the sorrowing family.

The Life Story

having always been a subject of great interest to her.

She began taking pianoforte lessons at four years, and has always looked forward to them, practicing at the keyboard she has rarely regarded as a task, and she continued to perfect her technique during the war, notwithstanding the many other calls upon her time.

Had not war conditions necessitated other arrangements, the "coming out" of Her Royal Highness in April, 1944 would have been marked by bigger events than was actually the case. British Princess and Princesses become "of age" at eighteen—three years earlier than British children of lesser rank, and ordinarily the occasion is celebrated by a banquet of considerable size at Buckingham Palace.

Princess Elizabeth did have a "coming out" party, but it was of the war-time austerity kind. It was a farewell gathering, too, marking the end of her active participation in the affairs of "H.M.S. President III"—the official name of the Sea Rangers company with which she had trained.

The Princess was not severing her connection with the Sea Rangers' movement in general. In fact, she had just become Commodore of all Sea Rangers. But she felt that she had no longer time to train with her friends, in view of the many new calls which would be made on her time after her coming of age. The members of the Princess' company were therefore invited to meet their ex-bosun at a celebration arranged also as her eighteenth birthday party.

By a coincidence, the event was also marked by one of the quaint royal customs connected with British Royalty. Every royal sturgeon caught off the coast of the United Kingdom is regarded as royal property and is handed over to the royal table. Such a fish was netted by a Hull fishing trawler on the eve of the Princess' birthday, and was sent for the party.

In the evening, Her Royal Highness attended an ordinary theatre performance, with the King and Queen, Queen Mary, and a few friends. The only other public event to celebrate her "coming out" was a special changing of the Guard ceremony by the Grenadiers.

In legal and constitutional matters, the Princess' eighteenth birthday was accompanied by much greater activity. As a fully-fledged royal personage, as a Princess in her own right, she was henceforward to have several new privileges. She became eligible to have ladies-in-waiting; she was not permitted to have a royal standard of her own; she received sanction to sit at the King's right hand in future state assemblies; and (most important of all) she became empowered to act, with three other members of the Royal Family, as deputy for the King when he is absent from Britain.

The first appointment to her retinue was made in July of the same year. After spending two week-ends with the King and Queen at Windsor, as a kind of prolonged interview, twenty-three-year-old Lady Mary Palmer, third daughter of Lord Selborne, was selected for the post. She was chosen partly by reason of her business abilities, as well as for her social qualifications.

Ladies-in-waiting today have far wider duties than in the past. No longer do they merely attend to the personal whims of their royal employers, or only private companionships. There is a business post, too. They reply to a considerable amount of correspondence, help to arrange the royal program, accompany their royal lady in public and private, make introductions, and perform dozens of other jobs.

Princess Elizabeth, however, can face the future confidently, knowing that she has been well-prepared for her role, and that the good wishes of people everywhere are behind her.
