Happenings of the Week

The Misses Helen Mills and Helen Holman gave a dance on Wednesday evening for the young people in aid of the Summerside Tennis Club.

Miss Ivy Bell entertained very pleasantly for Mrs. Floyd Cleveland on Wednesday evening at her home on Kirk Street, Summerside.

Mrs. Sinclair McKay of Summerside gave a charming afternoon tea in honor of her guest Mrs. McLennan, who is visiting her from St. John, N. B.

Miss Helen Manson entertained at four tables of bridge on Thursday evening at the family residence on Church Street, Summerside, in honor of Mrs. Floyd Cleveland of Youngstown, Ohio, who is spending the summer months with her parents, Mr. Justice and Mrs. Saunders.

Miss Alberta MacFarlane, who has been visiting her mother, Mrs. Nathan MacFarlane and sisters, the Misses Enid and Martha MacFarlane of Summerside leaves today for her home in Philadelphia. Many little parties were given in her honor during her visit.

One of this week's social events at Summerside was a charmingly arranged bridge of ten tables given by Miss Mona Saunders at the family residence on Tuesday evening for her guest Miss Mary Cleveland, who leaves today on return to her home in Beverly, Mass.

Mrs. D. R. Morrison entertained very pleasantly at her lovely home on Church Street, Summerside on Wednesday evening for a number of her friends from Bedouque. Bridge was played at three tables.

Mrs. H. H. Lefurgey and Mrs. Chapman of Ottawa were joint hostesses on Tuesday afternoon at seven tables of bridge at Mrs. Lefurgey's residence on Eustace Street, Summerside. Afternoon tea was served at the conclusion of play.

MANY LONDON MANSIONS DARK AND SILENT

Through the small, genteel streets of Mayfair, domain of London's aristocrats, poverty is stalking today. Few, if any, of Britain's great families have escaped financially unscathed from the economic storm. Many have seen their fortunes dwindle to nothing. Many, lost without the social contacts they can no longer afford, have locked their old houses and gone away.

More than one peer, if the public but knew it, lives in an attic. More than one famous drawing-room, only recently alive with brilliant men and women, is dark and silent now. They are available at a good price to rich American visitors—but there are not as many rich American visitors now.

The occasional sale of some great house, or country estate is all that one hears of their troubles. Sometimes they may admit that the burden of taxation has been too great to keep it up. Oftener they slip away to a cheaper place in another part of the country, or go abroad to live for awhile on a little pension.

Although their fortunes are gone, some of those who have lived most of their lives in Mayfair cannot tear themselves away. They stay on, but in different circumstances. One woman who three years ago spent nearly $250,000 to redecorate

BRONK TAMER AIR MINDED

CALGARY, July 29.—(By The Canadian Press) — A proclaimed woman champion broncho rider of Canada, Miss Nora Wells has invited some one to invest $10,000 in her for five years to launch her on a flying career. She offers to dedicate her life to the investor should she fail to obtain a transport pilot's license.

Reared on a Strathcona, Alta. ranch, Miss Wells has for a number of years competed in broncho and steer riding contests in Canada and the United States. In 1919 she started Calgarians by entering the contests at the annual Stampede, carrying off the Dominion broncho riding title. A few months later in Saskatoon she won the prize of the Prince of Wales by calmly conquering a rearing, pitching cayuse.

At a California rodeo a few years ago she suffered a bad fall sustaining injuries which brought her riding career to an end. She then turned to trapping in the lonely parts of British Columbia and later to cattle herding in the Alberta foothills.

This very attractive well built girl now intends to fly. "Nothing will stop me," she said recently "I'll get the money somehow."

TIMBUKTU HONORS SCOT

In honor of Alexander Gordon Laing, the first European to set foot in the mysterious city of Timbuktu, a memorial tablet was unveiled there recently. The ceremony was held in front of the house in which Gordon Laing had lived more than a century ago. Over the entrance was placed a plaque, which had been presented by the African Society to commemorate the exploits of this native of Edinburgh, Scotland.

W. C. T. U. Notes

FIGURES THAT SHOULD BE DISCUSSED IN OUR UNIONS

It would be a great uplift to the cause of prohibition generally if the curiosity of the world was really informed concerning the financial conditions of the American Republic, after twelve years of national prohibition, as compared with these conditions in leading wet nations.

W. G. Calderwood, writing in the Union Signal, gives some startling figures. Authoritative figures puts the average annual per capita income in the United States at $739, taxed 10.8 leaving the average net annual income at $658 for each man, woman and child.

England comes next with a per capita income of $409 taxed at 22.7, leaving an annual average income of $318. Multiplying that amount by two reveals that the average annual per capita income in England is less than one half of the American annual average income.

Germany's per capita annual average income is given at $268 and the tax is 20.4 per cent. Compare that tax rate with America's 10.8.

France has an average personal income of $202 with a 28 per cent. tax, so the French per capita annual income stands at $144.

Italy's average annual personal income is a mere $100 with a tax levy of 27.9, leaving the average annual income $72 per year.

There is much talk concerning the failure of prohibition in the United States, but what about the financial failure of the countries where the people are provided with plenty of drink?

WELL KNOWN NOVELIST ON ALCOHOL

Alcohol is poison, and it has not—and never had—in any guise whatever, the slightest compensating value for internal use.

It is not a food; it is poison.

It isn't a beneficial stimulant; it's a poison.

It isn't an aid to digestion; it's a poison.

It isn't a life saver; it's a life taker.

It's a parasite, forger, thief, panderer, liar, brutalizer and murderer.—Robert W. Chambers, in his fine story, "The Danger Mark."

THE AMERICAN PROHIBITION LAW MAKING ITSELF FELT

The liquor traffic is stark, ravaging mad to rid itself of prohibition in the American Republic, but its most outstanding efforts to accomplish this but reveal how it is being made to feel law backed by public sentiment.

An article in the April Cosmopolitan, "Speakeasy de Luxe," states: "In the amazing travesty of prohibition enforcement the old corner saloon has become a barricaded castle that drips with a super luxury not surpassed by the gilded saloons of Monte Carlo."

However, it is admitted that "This burst of magnificence so far seems confined to New York alone." It is also admitted that the "de-luxe hush hut" is of mushroom growth, "here today and gone tomorrow."

After an extended spell of magnificent description is the following admission: "We were making our way, incidentally, towards the bar in the rear, a bar ripped out a few days later to circumvent a raiding threat."

The disgusting atmosphere of this "fine" resort is thus described:

ed:

"Here and there at the bar were the glorified 'percentage girls' of the old Barbary Coast honky-tonks. In the manner of the Paris cocotte, it is their job to jockey some flushed stranger into casual conversation as a prelude to stinging him for a few drinks—and mayhaps 'taking him for a ride.'"

This is a true picture of the trend of the liquor trade, either legal or with the cloak of legality as a convenient covering. There is no doubt but that the world over, especially where it is called civilization, there is a deadly fear of prohibition contagion from the United States of America.

CANADIAN TROUBLES

In Quebec there is a maximum of liquor and a minimum of regulation. Nearly any one can get a drink or a hoghead of liquor at any time. The only prohibition against liquor is to boys and girls under eighteen. There in Quebec the old dram shop has returned and there is a huge liquor business and a tremendous tax.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITING

The hue and cry of the wet element in the United States is "prohibition does not prohibit" It is just because it does prohibit that there is reason for this everlasting yelp. Where are reliable witnesses on this wet verdict to be found? The contrary will be unanimously granted on the affirmation of the officers of the Salvation Army.

Colonel George H. Davis, principal of the Salvation Army Training College, Chicago, says:

"In our work on the streets in what is called 'the lower portions' of our cities, the Army does not now find, in connection with the street meetings, the open saloon vomiting out its array of drunken men (a few of them middle-aged and elderly but most of them young men), as was the case before prohibition went into effect.

"The open saloon is gone and this condition of things, so far as American manhood is concerned, has been reduced at least 90 per cent.; in fact, the drunken man on the street is something rarely seen in this day and generation."

"I JUST LOVE A MURDER"

Some weeks ago when Bishop Kidd, London, Ont., paid an official visit to Ingersoll, in his address to the fathers and mothers of the confirmed children he urged close attention to the forms of amusement entering into their children's lives. He emphasized that there were many moving picture films at this time which were so crudely suggestive that an innocent child could not see them without sinful results. He also stated that there were magazines, numerous newspapers and books so filthy that they should never be permitted in the home.

"Findings refers to this particularly. Just at the time this warning was being given, a true and terrible story reached the editorial ear. A little girl told her teacher that she did not like the last picture show she had seen. In answer to the teacher's inquiring, "Why?" replied, "There was no murder in it." A further interrogating, "Surely you do not like murders," received the positive reply, "I just love them and hang on the arm of the chair and have a good time."

IT'S THE BRAIN THAT COUNTS

You can get along with a wooden leg but you can't get along with a wooden head. The physical value of man is not so much. Man as analyzed in our laboratories is worth about ninety-eight cents. Seven bars of soap, lime enough to whitewash a chicken coop, phosphorus enough to cover the heads of a thousand matches, is not so much, you see. It is the brain that counts, but in order that your brain may be kept clear you must keep your body fit and well. That can not be done if one drinks liquor. A man who has to drag around a habit that is a danger and a menace to society ought to go off to the woods and live alone. We do not tolerate the obvious use of morphine or cocaine or opium and we should not tolerate intoxicating liquor, because I tell you these things are what break down the command of the individual over part in everything these days. But sometimes other things parade under the name of honesty, too. Selfishness, indulgence and independence are none the less unworthy because they are done openly and above board.

Talking with a modern young woman not long ago about this matter, I was told in defence of her frankness about not being able to stand her sister. "Mother must have made us jealous of each other when we were little. I never remember caring much for Joan—we were always quarrelling. And Bob left home early to go to school and never came back. We girls didn't miss him either. He's married and we've never seen his wife." "Did this girl put her finger on the trouble when she said, 'Mother must have done something?'" "No mother would deliberately estrange her children from each other, but it can be done unconsciously in a hundred ways, often negatively too. I believe the greatest harm is done in infancy and early childhood if no real effort is made to have children consider each other and to learn generosity and sympathy and love. Loyalty is a fine thing and family loyalty is the finest of all. Surely we are not going to let it go into limbo and be classed with the lost arts!"

seal or affront or criticism.

A brother was a brother no matter how far he roamed, and sisters were sisters forever. They wrote and visited and had regular old George Eliot reunions every so often and even the in-laws were drawn into the vortex.

Now things are different to the old fashioned eye like my little red blood appears to have more thickness than water. Youngsters who by any miracle may be sitting still long enough to read this, very likely find this moment propitious for exclaiming, "Here's an old girl who still believes in that old brotherly and sisterly business! Where has she been living? Doesn't she know that people choose their own friends now and that this family stuff is gone with hoop skirts? No one with any intelligence feels bound by an accident of birth these days. When we don't like the family or someone in it we're not hypocritical enough to pretend we do. We are more honest, that's all. And if the devil gave us some of our relations thank heaven we can and do pick our own friends."

HONESTY, OR—?

If the aforesaid young person has read on as far as this let me seize the opportunity to congratulate her or him. Without any doubt, honesty is playing a big
