a certain average, should be placed on an individual rather than a family basis.

—Mr. Gardiner said this was no possible. The act had only been brought in to make it possible either for certain people to live where "they never should have been encouraged to go" until better conditions could be achieved or until they were moved elsewhere.

—It was not generally recognized that it was closely associated with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, a 1935 statute aimed at rehabilitation of areas which it was generally agreed had not been properly settled in the years when it was being settled under the administration of policies which originated in Ottawa.

—It was aimed at getting people off sub-marginal drought lands and at improving the land on which they are to settle or have settled.

—Some 1,400 families had been moved before the war but it was hope in the years ahead to make movements numbering in the thousands of families.

Canada.
George Drew, Progressive Conservative leader, adjourned debate on the bill.
Promises Information Mr. Gardiner promised to give later "all the information available with regard to the production of agricultural products and the relationship of their consumption in Canada to the necessity of marketing them outside Canada." His statement about the movement of Prairie farm families came as he returned to a suggestion by Mr. Ross that payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, a benefit based on crop yields below
a certain average, should be plac-
family basis.
