—MALPUE.—The home of Mrs. Mary Henry of Malpue has been very much saddened by the receipt of the news from Medicine Hat, Alberta, of the death of her youngest daughter, Mrs. C. A. Gould. Mary Henry was beloved by all who knew her during her residence at the old home. She was a distinguished scholar of Fanning School and having won the highest Scholarship in that school. About 3 years ago she went West to live with her aunt in Vancouver, B. C. There she married Mr. C. A. Gould, and later they returned to Medicine Hat, where after a very serious illness and operation in the Hospital she passed away on April 15th. She was a very sincere Christian, having been a member of the Mission Band and of the Presbyterian Church before she went away two years ago. The interment took place in Medicine Hat on April 27th, the floral tributes to her memory being very many and beautiful. Our deepest sympathy of a large circle is extended to Mrs. Henry and family as this is the second severe bereavement they have experienced within a few months.

GOVERNMENT TO CONTROL SENATE

OTTAWA, May 12.—Conservative ascendancy in the new Liberal Senate of Canada, will, it is estimated, be brought about within a period of two years, and in any event after the next general election, in the anticipated event of it resulting in the return of the present Government. At present the membership of the Upper House is 37, of whom 51 are Liberals and 33 Conservatives, which there are three vacant seats which were occupied by Sir George W. Ross, Senator Cox and Senator Gibson. When these vacancies are filled—and this may not be for a considerable time—the Liberal majority will be 15.

FOR WESTERN INCREASE.

Should Sir Lyman Melvin Jones carry out his intention of joining forces with the Ministerialists, the majority will be 14. At the present time there is before the House a bill which increases the Western senatorial representation in the Senate by nine—two each for Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and three for British Columbia. If this Bill passes the Liberal lead will be further reduced to five. The probabilities, however, are against its going through his session, at least that it will not become operative.

TO AMEND MEASURE.

The Liberal majority in the Senate have intimated their intention of amending the measure so as to provide that it will come into effect only after the next general election. The House of Commons will likewise be increased as a result of the last census. It is not anticipated that they would go so far as to kill the Bill outright, inasmuch as the constitutional authority of the Government is not questioned. There may be, it is argued, something more in the argument that the increases in both Houses should be simultaneous.

HOW MAJORITIES VANISH.

How majorities vanish furnishes an interesting story in the light of past history. Back in 1896, when the Conservative Government went down to defeat, there were eighty-one senators and but one vacancy. Of the eighty only ten were Liberals and the remaining seventy were Conservatives. Many of the latter, however, were old men, and, in the natural order of things, Father Time got in his work. The lead diminished, and the ranks became decimated year by year. The creation of the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta entitled them to four senators each, whereas the Northwest territories, which they comprised previously, had but two. Of these, two, one Senator Perley, died. The vacancy was filled by a Liberal, and the six new-Senatorships, of course, were assigned to that political faith. Then there were numerous deaths in the Conservative Senatorial ranks in other provinces.

TO VANISHING POINT.

It was in 1902, six years after the defeat of the Conservative party, that the Conservative majority in the Upper House got down almost to the vanishing point. The votes that session gave the Conservative a lead of about four. Certain party divisions were a tie owing to absentees from votes.

In 1903 the tide turned. At first the parties stood forty-three to forty-three and then forty-five to forty-five. It was in 1904, however, that the lead became more decisive, the division standing forty-eight to thirty-eight in support of the Liberals. The Liberal lead kept on growing, reaching the high water mark in 1911, when there were sixty-eight Liberals and nineteen Conservatives.

MORTALITY IS HEAVIER.

The mortality in the Upper House is much heavier than in the Commons, owing to the higher average age of the Senators. Although, during his term of office, Sir Wilfred Laurier made a point of selecting middle-aged men, the proportion of those who have exceeded or reached the allotted span of three score and ten is much more strongly Liberal than Conservative. There are now sixty-two Senators who have reached the age of seventy and nineteen of these are Liberals. Back in 1896 an actuarial expert estimated how long it would take for the Conservative majority to disappear, and came within a year of the mark making allowance for the new members from the West. Curiously enough in his day, Sir Wilfred Laurier appointed a whole Senate. When he assumed office there were eighty-one Senators and during the fifteen years he was in power he appointed exactly that number. Since 1911, the present Government has appointed nineteen, nearly all of whom replaced Liberals. At the present rate the Government will be in control of the Upper House within a couple of years.
