Scandal of Gretna Green

(By British United Press)

LONDON, May 18.—Elopement and clandestine marriage at Gretna Green, between England and Scotland, have long been a topic for those romanticists who think of the high road, a stage coach, horse-back pursuit and hold up.

The Gretna marriage practice had flourished for the last 150 years, rife more difficult in England.

In this one corner of the Kingdom since legislation made hasty marriage in Britain a crime, the marriage shop where marriage lines are sold like a pound of tea. Here people are partnered off at a dance, and the closest and most lasting of human relationships is entered upon as blithely as a picnic.

Boys and girls can go to this place and mortgage their future; while more designing people can use it with no intention of treating it seriously, though of course, in many cases both parties are quite sincere.

The traffic is open and unabashed. Gretna Green boasts its own publicity agent, living in the village. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland during its sittings at Edinburgh will be asked to take steps to stop this scandal. The subject will be debated on resolutions from the presbytery of Annan, which embraces the Border district.

The resolutions declare that such marriages are leading to a serious abuse, in the victimisation of woman and in other ways, and that legislation on the subject is urgently needed.

This church move has been taken on the initiative of the Rev. J. O. Stafford, parish minister of Gretna, who tells a pathetic story brought to his notice by a Cumberland relieving officer.

A girl was married at Gretna. The man discarded her, finding that the wedding was not legal. She learned that she had no claim on him. She was about to become a mother, and applied for poor law assistance. The experience so preyed upon her mind that she has now become mentally deranged, and is in an asylum.

Another case can be given. A Carlisle lad, still in his apprenticeship, desired to be married, but his parents objected on the score of his youth. He and the girl ran away to Gretna. They lived together, but were not happy.

Then the parents found that the Gretna marriage was not binding. The couple separated and the lad returned to his parents.

Mr. Rennison, the Gretna blacksmith, says he is always careful to inquire if one of the parties has been a resident for 21 days in Scotland before the marriage. His residence on the part of one of the parties is required before the marriage can be considered valid.

Under the Brougham Act of 1856, passed to remedy the scandal which arose from old elopements to Gretna, the marriage must be registered by warrant with the Sheriff of Dumfries, before whom the parties must appear within three months with witnesses who are in a position to prove that one of the contracting parties lived for the requisite period in Scotland before contracting the marriage.

If a period of three months has elapsed the parties must go to the Court of Session. Some of the marriages are so registered.

had 203 passengers. The majority were Danish, Swedish and Norwegians. Two all British specials are the "Doric," carrying eleven families, next. The first, with passengers from 200 young men and twenty girls for the Saskatchewan Government, arrived at noon Wednesday. The second all British train arrived early this morning, with passengers from the "Lethia" and the "Megantic."

One hundred and eleven Scandinavians are due tonight. Swedes and Norwegians make up the largest number.

GENEVA, Switzerland, May 17.—The advanced researches of women University women from many countries will gather here Aug. 7-14 to attend the triennial conference of the International Federation of University Women. This conference will celebrate the tenth anniversary of the founding of the Federation. The programme will include reports and discussions on the provision of international fellowships for research; training of university women for careers in industry, commerce and finance; the interchange of secondary school teachers, and many other subjects of importance.

Dr. Ellen Gleditsch, of Oslo, Norway, is President of the International Federation. Miss Lalla Scott, of Toronto, Ont., President of the Canadian Federation of University Women, with a number of members of the Canadian branch, will attend the conference.

The significance of this meeting here of university women is comprehensively expressed in the following article recently published in a Geneva newspaper:

"It is the destiny of Geneva to participate actively in great international movements. In the course of centuries the smallest of republics has received within its narrow but hospitable borders numerous and illustrious visitors. In our epoch of collective manifestations, it is above all congresses and assemblies that it has the privilege of seeing some to it, in order that they may accomplish their work surrounded by its harmonious landscape.

"Thus it is that the Swiss Federation of University Women is preparing to receive in a fitting manner, the members of the I. F. U. W. who will hold at Geneva from the 7th to the 14th of August their fifth international congress; this congress will also be the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the founding of the I. F. U. W. This federation which dates from 1919 includes no less than 31 national associations scattered over the five continents. The delegates of the association meet in congress every three years.

"What are the objects pursued by the International Federation? Its purpose is to work in a spirit of generous comprehension for the development of relations between the university women of the whole world. In order to permit them to defend their interests by the application of the principles of mutual help and solidarity, the Federation has as its chief objective the distribution of fellow ships destined, not to pay for the university studies, but to favor

PRINCE SEEKS FAST COMPANY ON GOLF LINKS

MOORTOWN, Eng., May 18.—The Prince of Wales desires to play golf this week-end, the Yorkshire Evening News announced today, and has selected as his possible opponent Walter Hagen, captain of the United States Ryder Cup team, and open champion of Great Britain.

It was learned today that Leo Diegel, American professional champion and Ryder Cup player, and Aubrey Boomer, British professional, would complete the proposed foursome.

The match, if carried through, would bring into competition two of the most popular figures in England today. The Prince is ever popular with subjects of the King, while Walter Hagen, through his phenomenal golfing exploits, has acquired a great following among the sportsmen of the Kingdom.

The Prince is handicapped at 18 strokes, but critics agree he is nearer a 12-stroke man. He has been practising diligently of late under the guidance of the veteran professional, James Braid.

His chief trouble, critics agree, is impetuosity with his iron shots, and he also has a tendency to devote too little care to putting. He is ranked higher than any of his brothers, however.
