Service

His wife was on a holiday, and he was doing his own shopping and cooking.

"How much are the eggs." he asked the shopkeeper.

"Fifty cents a dozen," said the man behind the counter, "Cracked ones twenty-five cents a dozen."

The harassed husband looked thoughtful. "All right," he said "crack me a dozen."

—W.M.S. BIRTHDAY PARTY—A very pleasant afternoon was spent at the beautiful home of Mrs. John Stewart, Central Bedeque, on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 12th, it being the monthly meeting of the Bedeque Auxiliary of the W.M.S. of the United Church, also the annual mite-box opening, and a birthday party for Mrs. A. T. Wright, the eldest member. The house was beautifully decorated, flowers being in evidence everywhere both inside and out. Mrs. Stewart welcomed her gusets in her pleasing manner and Mrs. L. P. Archibald, the President, opened the meeting by stating we wished to do honor to Mrs. Wright on the occasion of her 88th birthday, and on behalf of the Auxiliary presented her with a box of fruit and confectionary, after which she received the congratulations of all the ladies, and they sang "For She is a Jolly Good Fellow." Mrs. Wright, who was overcome with surprise, replied very feelingly and thanked them for their kindness and good wishes. Mrs. Craig also spoke a few words of thanks on behalf of her mother. Mrs. Wright is a charter member of the W.M.S. which was organized in August 1884 and for 50 years has been a faithful member, never willingly being absent from a meeting, until the infirmities of age prevented her going. The meeting then proceeded in the usual way. Mrs. Percy Affleck read the devotional leaflet, "The followers of Jesus." There were seventeen present. The mite-boxes were opened by the treasurer, Mrs. C. Leard and yielded $18.60 with quite a number not yet sent in. After the routine business a temperance program was given. Reading, Mrs. C. Craig, "Temperance issues of the day," and Mrs. Archibald gave "an incident in smuggling in Nova Scotia." After singing the hymn "In Christ there is no East or West." The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction. Mrs. Stewart then told the ladies to be seated and she, assisted by Miss Doris Muncey, served most delicious ice-cream and cake. A beautifully decorated birthday cake for the "guest of honor" was brought in and cut by Mrs. W. Calbeck and served to all. The ladies then took leave of Mrs. Wright with the wish that she would be spared to come to many more meetings, and thanked the hostess for her kind hospitality.

PRINCE MDIVANI'S NOSE BROKEN AT POLO

BIARRITZ, France, Sept. 18—The handsome features of Prince Alexis Mdivani, husband of Barbara Hutton, Woolworth heiress, were marred today when he suffered a broken nose during a polo match.

The young prince was hit in the face during a game at this fashionable French resort, and sent tumbling from his mount to the ground. Women rushed screaming from the side-lines, surrounding him and offering him handkerchiefs to stop the flow of blood. He was helped off the field.

Meanwhile, his pretty and rich young wife, Barbara, on the Riviera, was reported refusing to accompany the Prince to India this Fall, where the plans to go for a series of polo games. The rumors were that she objects to polo, which some said takes up more of Alexis's time than his duties as a husband, causing renewed intimations that all is not well in their romance.

FILIPINO WOMEN LOSE HOPE OF VOTE

MANILA, P.I., Sept. 18—Hopes of Filipino women to have the right to vote during the decade of the insular commonwealth government fell today as the constitutional convention's suffrage committee voted 22 to 16 against the grant.

The chief argument against suffrage was the added expense that would be involved in elections.

EXCITING THINGS ARE HAPPENING TO THE NEW fall fashions

You're going to look new this fall! You'll be wearing styles that are far in advance! You'll see Coats that are delightfully modeled, you'll note the absence of fur on the sleeves, you'll like the intriguing rich fur collars.

And the Suits, fur collared mostly and developed in most attractive fabrics, will interest you.

Dresses will be shown at the opening in a variety that will take your breath. Really a matter of a metropolitan show for a city of the size of Charlottetown.

The Million Dollar Doll

BY C. N. & A. M. WILLIAMSON

"Why do you persist in calling her Miss Desmond—as you did at Monte Carlo?" Sheridan asked, calm now, as he seemed to hear a faint echo of the name "Desmond," sounding far off in his mind.

"I call her that because it's her name, as you know well."

"I don't know. Because you tell me this, do you think—"

"What I think is, that you're bluffing, Mr. Sheridan. I'd do the same in your place—if I could be in such a place! You can't have been deceived for long about the girl, even if she was palmed off on you at first as the person you wanted for this job. Once you met her, you'd have seen——"

"I never saw Miss Divine, to my knowledge, till after she came on board the yacht."

"Miss Divine never came on board your yacht. Why, I know this child—this convent child! I met Miss Desmond at her father's house. She's ten years younger than Juliet Divine, and innocent of the world as a kitten."

Scoundrel the man might be, but there was a ring of truth in his voice. A hundred memories rushed over Miles; the look of virginal youth about the girl which had struck him so incongruously at first; all her sweet ways of a child; her chatter of the nuns and the convent her talk of religion that night of the storm: her seeming horror when he had insulted her with his rough kiss: Harky's bewilderment, and defence of the girl after a time of respectable stand-offishness; the old woman's belief that "the poor little thing hadn't a cent," and that indignant refusal of ten thousand dollars, all these ways of an ingenue which Phillips had warned him would be displayed to snare him.

Had he been a blind fool? But how could he have guessed?—Was it true? Could Phillips himself have been bamboozled? Wasn't this tirade an attempt at blackmail from Nazlo? Why should an innocent girl named Desmond have come for a yachting cruise alone with him, in the place of Juliet Divine? Desmond—Desmond! Had he some forgotten association with that name?

Bewildered, Sheridan asked himself these questions: yet the inner self that was his real self, and in the most intimate secrets of his soul know suddenly and surely that the girl he loved was not Juliet Divine. He could have groaned aloud, shamed by past thoughts of her, past deeds towards her. It atoned not at all that in spite of reason he'd asked her to marry him, for had he not done it as a high favour, from a knight to a beggar-maid, admiring his own chivalry. How could she have forgiven and loved him?

He ought to have guessed, in spite of Phillips warnings. He ought to have known. It was horrible to have truth thrown at him, like a bone to a dog, by Nazlo. His spirit rushed back through the golden silence of the desert, and flung itself at the girl's feet.

MILES ACTS ON IMPULSE

"You have to admit that you do know." Nazlo's hard voice crashed into Miles thoughts.

Miles stared at him with such anguish in his eyes that the truth flashed upon Nazlo as truth had flashed upon Sheridan. He saw through a dazzle of blinding light that Miles Sheridan had not known the girl's identity.

To him the other seemed a fool, and to the Shoe-King a fool was some degrees below a knave. Yet Nazlo was human and a faint twinge of pity surprised him—contemptuous pity.

"I admit now," Miles said," I must have been a fool not to know. I believe what you tell me. But I wish to God I hadn't heard it from you, of all people. For you to accuse me is—like the pot calling the kettle black—isn't it? She—Miss Desmond, you call her — shrank from you at Monte Carlo. You must have noticed that. I asked her a question. She wouldn't say much—but she answered. I—though I didn't know what she was, as you did, I showed her more respect than she had from you. Part of our business arrangement was—that I should keep away from Miss Divine, except in public."

"Yet you came near enough, to ask her to marry you!—unless you did that in public?"

"Circumstances arose — unexpectedly."

"Circumstances always arise! They did with me. Miss Desmond gave me no time to say I'd marry her if she'd have me. She misunderstood the situation."
