Mr. Sinclair, after a few amusing remarks, read this address: "As we move along the journey of life there come times that stand out from the ordinary routine of life. This, tonight, is one of those significant milestones. As we reflect upon the past we may recall many sorrows and regrets, but even apart from these, life has its compensations. One of these blessings is the friends and associations which add to the melody of the tune of life. Without these golden gems, how lacking in music would be the measure of our days. Life's richest blessings are only fully appreciated as we share them with others. The home is essentially a sharing partnership. It is in the home that character is made. We in this country have all had the privilege of sharing in a home life such as that so accurately portrayed by Burns in his Cotter's Saturday Night. In this home in which we are gathered tonight are to be found those Christian virtues which make manhood and womanhood dignified in every good work in the community and we ask you to accept these gifts as a token of the esteem with which you are held. We heartily congratulate you tonight on your twenty-fifth anniversary of your wedding. We trust that you may long be spared in our midst and that the passing years may add to your store of happiness as they have in the past."
