Paris Styles

By MARY KNIGHT
United Press Staff Correspondent

PARIS, July 6.—(U. P.)—If you were told it was a matter of life or death to pick out the leading couturier in Paris, if you were an honest man and fair judge, there would be one and only one thing that you could do. Take the list of the favorite 40, shut your eyes and turn time backward in its flight until you come to the rime that starts off, Eeency, meency, mihey, mo.

It is a pure case of counting out to see who's "IT". Fashion plays so many games, and plays them so fast, that all the great houses are "IT" in a most perfect and impartial rotation. A summer tailleur by Rasmus has all the "IT" earmarks. The material is Bianchini's flaminga, printed on a lovely design in beige on a blue background. It has a blouse of beige crepe satin with a delightful jabot.

The artful Jenny Dolly is "IT" with a debutante dress that upholds the Victorian shoulder-line with a vengeance. She does it with taffeta of pale green that makes a wide circular skirt. A scalloped tulle bertha bordered with barely pink flowers is all there is to the bodice and all that is necessary after a soft bow has been added at the waistline, center front.

Nothing could be more "IT-ish" than a gown from Lanvin made of black satin, with a basque that is short and stiffened to the texture of pliable willow—the kind summer furniture is made of. This ripples and runs around the waist exactly like the brim on a floppy hat. Boucheron is "IT" for the jewelry game when he supplies this Lanvin model with a gorgeous diamond necklace and four bracelets.

BLIND BRITON TEACHES 2,000 HOW TO SWIM

MEXBOROUGH, Eng., July 6.—(U. P.)—Blinded in a mine accident many years ago, Robert Gilling has taught 2,000 men and boys to swim. All the lessons have been given in his cottage drawing room. The pupils lie on a revolving stool, where they are taught the various strokes before visiting swimming pools.

Gilling is the only blind person in Great Britain to receive the honorable teacher's certificate of the Royal Saving Society for swimming and life-saving.

NEW PENNSY GAS FIELD PRODUCES 210 MILLION FEET HARRISBURG, Pa., July 5, (U. P.)—The new Pennsylvania natural gas field was producing 210,000,000 cubic feet of gas daily on June 1, a survey by the Department of Internal Affairs determined.

The volume came from 10 wells of the 18 already brought in since the discovery of gas in Tioga County on the Palmer farm last September.

Drilling operations were under way at 147 other sites, most of them in the same county, but others extend in nearby Potter, Bradford, Lycoming, and Clearfield Counties. The extent of the gas discovery depends on the results of the drilling in the adjacent counties.

At present, only 2,500,000 cubic feet of gas is being marketed daily, the survey showed.

How to Keep the Honeymoon From Waning in Marriage — Dog-in-the-Manger Who Won't Let His Wife Run the Car — Must This Wife Sacrifice Her Happiness to Her Mother-in-Law?

Dear Miss Dix—I am going to marry the nicest girl in the world and I don't want our marriage to slump as so many marriages seem to do. How can I keep our honeymoon from waning?

A DECENT MAN.

Answer: Well, I think that just your desire to keep your love moon always in your sky will do more than anything else to keep it from setting.

For the thing that is mostly the matter with marriage is carelessness. Husbands and wives think that just because they are so much in love when they get married they will always stay that way and so they do not take the trouble to preserve their romance or to foster the little illusions that keep each attractive to the other. They do not even practice the little tendernesses on which love thrives. Many husbands and wives feel that marriage gives them a perfect right to neglect their personal appearance and that it isn't necessary for a husband or wife even to attempt to be easy on the other's eyes. Husband doesn't consider it worth while to shave for a mere wife and slops around the house without a collar and in a soiled shirt. Wife doesn't feel called upon to dress up for a mere husband, and she appears in slovenly kimono or soiled finery and run-down-at-the-heel slippers at the breakfast table.

Each presents such an unattractive appearance to the other that it is no wonder that they get tired of looking at each other and wonder what kind of an astigmatism they were suffering from when they picked each other out for a life prospect.

Therefore, son let me impress upon you that if you want to keep up the honeymoon you must dress the part of the ardent wooer who is trying to look good to the girl he wants to marry. And the minute you observe your wife beginning to get careless, buy her a pretty new frock and remind her that what you fell in love with was a young woman who looked like a daily hint from Paris, not something that looks as if it was something that the cat left on the doorstep.

Many husbands and wives do not treat each other with even common politeness. They do not show each other the ordinary politeness. They do not show each other the ordinary courtesy that they would show to a casual stranger. The husband would never dream of telling the woman he took out to dinner that she looked like a frump and didn't know what she was talking about, but he has no hesitation in telling his wife that she is a fool and her clothes look as if his worst enemy had bought them.

The wife wouldn't think of telling any other man on earth but her husband home truths that hurt his vanity. She wouldn't criticize Mr. Smith's grammar and pronunciation. She wouldn't interrupt Mr. Jones in his pet story to tell him she had heard it a hundred times. She wouldn't tell Mr. Brown that he danced like a performing elephant or Mr. Gray that he was long-winded and tedious in his conversation and that nobody wanted to hear his personal reminiscences. But she will hand out these devastating facts to her husband without batting an eye.

Therefore, son, if you want to keep your wife thinking you are the great and only one, never criticize her and never tell her of her faults and weaknesses. Let somebody else bring her the bad news, not you. And when she begins to criticize you, tell her gently but firmly that fault-finding is the death of love and that the theme song of the home must be praise and not the anvil chorus.

A lot of husbands and wives disdain to use any tact in dealing with each other. They consider diplomacy too precious a commodity for home consumption. Theirs is the strong-arm method rather than the soft-soap one in dealing with each other. They bump into each other's prejudices instead of stepping nimbly around them. They drag into the conversation the topics that they know beforehand will start a family row.

Be not like these foolish ones, son. Use subtlety in handling your wife and great shall be your reward. Don't tell her that she is the worst cook that ever put a pot on a stove. Tell her that she is so intelligent that you know she will make a fine art of cooking and she will wear out the gas range trying to live up to your expectations of her. If you want her to be thrifty, praise her for being thrifty and she will squeeze every nickel. If you want her to be a companion, read with her and talk to her about the things you are interested in. Take your wife along with you into your world. Make her take an interest in your interests and she will break her neck to try to keep up with you.

Many husbands and wives grow indifferent to each other because they abandon all love-making at the altar. They cease paying each other any little lover-like attentions. They never give each other a kiss that isn't just a dry peck of habit. They never pay each other any compliments. They never have dates or go off on a spree together. The man absorbs himself in his business. The woman absorbs herself in her house and children and they drift so far apart that they finally have nothing in the world in common and do not even enjoy being together. Often they have nothing to say to each other and are bored to death when left alone.

You have to make just as much conscious effort, son, and work just as hard to keep love a going concern as you would your business. If you neglected your shop or your office for a year you know what would happen to it. You would go bankrupt. And that is what happens to marriage where neither the husband nor the wife make any effort to keep the other charmed and interested and glad he or she married the party of the first part.

So keep on being the lover if you want to be loved. Pay your wife compliments. Bring her flowers and candy. Take her out at least once or twice a week. Woo her more ardently than you did when you were trying to marry her and that will keep her feeling like a lady love and acting like one.

And if you will do this your honeymoon will never wane.

DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I have been married seven years. Have three adorable children and a fine husband and everything we want. He will not let me drive the family car. Miss Dix, I made many sacrifices to pay for this car. In fact, I do without the things I really need in order to meet the payments, but my husband will not let me use it and it stands out in front of his place of business all day and on Saturday afternoons in a parking yard while he is at a show and I stay at home from one end of the week to the other, as I am unable to afford help. And I think how nice it would be if I could take the children out in it and get a little rest and relaxation myself.

I have thought of leaving my husband, but I have the children to consider and I am in a strange town almost a thousand miles away from my home and people. Do you think I am unreasonable in wanting to drive the car a little?

MRS. K. L. N.

Answer: I certainly think that you are in your rights in wanting to have some use of the car that you are helping to pay for, and I think your husband is most selfish and unreasonable in refusing to let you have it. Perhaps he has never really thought about how long and dull the days

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

By Annabelle Worthington

Another snappy sports dress that Paris designed for youth. And to make it is just as simple as falling off a log!

Don't you love the umbrella skirt plaits? The crossover yoked bodice gives it much distinction. It's sleeveless, of course.

This ideal sports type is delightful in opaline yellow flat washable crepe silk.

Style No. 3056 may be had in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36 and 38 inches bust. Size 16 requires 3 yards of 39-inch material.

White shantung is stunning too and may be trimmed with vivid red bindings.

Skipper blue linen with white dots is sportive. Flat washable crepe silk, wool jersey, shantung, striped cotton broadcloth, men's shirting, novelty pique and cotton mesh make up beautifully in this model.

Vacation Days are here again! So nearly here, at least, that it's time for you to be thinking about your Summer wardrobe.

Be sure to fill in the size of the pattern. Send stamps or coin (coin preferred.)

Price of Pattern 15 cents.

are to a woman who is shut within her own house all the time or how impossible it is for her to get out with three babies unless she has a car into which she can put them. That is the best way in the world to nurse children and it gives the mother some rest and relaxation besides. I know of many men who have bought little cars just for this specific purpose of giving their wives a way to take care of the children and give them air and diversion.

DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I have a devoted husband whom I love more than anything on earth and he loves me as much. We would be perfectly happy except for his mother, who lives with us and makes our lives miserable, and she stays with us all the time, although she has other children with whom she could divide her time. I have asked my husband to let me get a room for myself and he can stay with her, but he will not agree to this. Do you think I am wrong? Should I sacrifice my life to her have her way just to please my husband and his mother? What shall I do?

WORRIED COUPLE.

Answer: Get the room, but put your mother-in-law in it. There is no reason why you should sacrifice your entire life to her. If you provide for her, that is all you are called upon to do. No man has a right to ask his wife to live with a disagreeable old woman.

Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. How should one make introductions in a very informal meeting?

A. Saying each name with the proper inflection is enough. Thus: "Mrs. Brown, Miss Williams."

Q. How should one remove the stones of cherries, plums, or grapes from the mouth while at the table?

A. With the fingers and laid upon the plate.

Q. Are scrolls and ornate trimmings in good taste on engraved invitations?

A. No, they are always in poor taste.

Can you just imagine what turmoil the copywriters would be in today if Eugenie had brought back to America with her grandfather, Mr. Kirkpatrick, instead of staying in Paris to later become Empress Eugenie?

A silly notion, but try to think how funny it would be if we were all worrying about the new Kirkpatrick hat silhouette, or the Marie-Eugenie-Ignace-Augustine De Montijo silhouette. But the "Empress Eugenie" silhouette has a verve and the right dramatic tang. We think of the grandeur of a court, and nothing so ordinary as a consul's home in maybe H. Street, Washington.

So be dramatic, and don't dare admit to a soul that you haven't yet an Empress Eugenie sailor, or a new hat with lifted brim, or a long left side turned way far away from your hair. These open spaces on the left side allow for pink and brown plumes curling in the nape of the neck, or soft feathers laid in pad effect, or small bird heads used in double effect. And if you don't like the way Eugenie parted her hair, try one of the Rembrandt looking velvet tams from the times of Francis I and the Renaissance.
