BRADALBANE W. I.

The Annual Meeting of the Bradalbane Village Women's Institute met at the home of Mrs. Lorne Seaman on Tuesday Nov. 8, with the President Mrs. Cuyler Matheson presiding. Meeting opened by singing Institute Ode, followed by Creed in unison. Roll Call was answered by six members and three visitors. Minutes of last meeting and last annual meeting were read and adopted. The Secretary gave a report of activities during the year showing a balance of $9.75 on hand. The report of committee was then given and the following new committees were appointed:

Sick, Mrs. P. Murray, Mrs. Flora Mackay; school, Mrs. Allan Hickox; Mrs. Lorne Seaman; lunch, Hazel Woodside, Mrs. Allan Hickox; Mrs. Lorne Seaman.

The following officers were then

ected for the ensuing year:
President, Mrs. Lorne Seaman.
Vice-President, Mrs. Flora Cummings.
Sec'y-Treasurer, Margaret MacKay.

Auditors: Mrs. Cuyler Matheson, Hazel Woodside.
Directors: Mrs. Colin Matheson, Mrs. Len Todd.

The new President then took charge of the meeting. Mrs. Flora Cummings invited the members to her home for next meeting. Meeting closed by singing the National Anthem. A dainty lunch was served by the lunch committee assisted by the hostesses.

EARLIER YEARS GAVE NO TITLE TO HIGH PLACE

(Canadian Press)

There was little thought at the birth of a second boy to the then Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York at Sandringham, Dec. 14, 1895, that the young prince, Edward VIII, would become George VI of Great Britain, Ireland, and of the British dominions beyond the seas. King.

Much less was it imagined on Aug. 4, 1900, the new-born daughter of the ancient Scottish family of Bowes Lyon, a commoner, would one day be Queen Consort and journey to Canada with the King on a fresh venture in royal contacts with self-governing dominions. But already their Majesties are no strangers to the peoples of the British Empire.

Prince Albert, now the King, was born 18 months after his lustrous brother Edward, afterwards Prince of Wales, later Edward VIII and now Duke of Windsor. Likelihood of kingship for Albert was remote. His great grandmother, the revered Victoria, was then in the last decade of her 64-year reign. His grandfather Edward, his father George and the elder brother Edward were before him in the succession.

Queen Victoria was at that time a rather legendary figure outside the immediate circle of her own family. The Canadian Press recalls. But overpressed with the uncertainties of even royal lives she alone may have had a vision of the second prince reaching the throne with the name Albert, after her late husband the Prince Consort. When the young Albert, in the fate of kings, did become monarch, he chose to be the sixth of the Georges, honouring the memory of his own father.

Some historians of the day relate Good Queen Victoria was quite disturbed that the latest royal heir should arrive on the anniversary of the death of the consort over whose loss she had remained inconsolable for many years. The incident, however, was rendered less painful for her, however, when the parents (afterwards King George and Queen Mary) readily agreed the first name of their second child should be Albert. He was christened Albert Frederick Arthur George.

Queen Victoria's own diary shows a more cheerful reaction to the event: "This terrible anniversary has returned for the 34th time," the Queen wrote, referring to the loss of the Prince Consort. "When I went to my dressing room I found telegrams from George (George V) saying that dear May (Queen Mary) had been safely delivered of a son at three this morning. George's first feeling was regret that this dear child should be born on such a bad day. I have a feeling that may be a blessing for the dear little boy is looked upon as a gift from God."

Brother's Recommendation

Prince Albert spent his earlier years at York Cottage, Sandringham, the country home of his parents, then the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York. He was generally in the company of Prince Edward, afterwards Edward VIII. Those boyhood companionships left Edward with a good impression of his younger brother's character and abilities. When Prince of Wales he remarked on one occasion: "My brother Bertie (Albert) would make a better King than I would." The future, when Albert reigned in his stead, will give observers of another day an opportunity to make comparisons.

Second sons in the line of succession are never subjects of observation as heirs-apparent, and it would appear Prince Albert was a bit eclipsed by David, as Edward was known in the royal family. "It was the elder boy's pranks during their visit to their indulgent grandparents which were noted by visitors to Sandringham," wrote one observer.

The late Lord Escher, governor of Windsor Castle and a close friend and confidant of the royal family, with an excellent opportunity of noting the characteristics of the two boys, wrote in his diary in 1901: "The second boy is the sharpest but there is something rather taking about Prince Edward."

Daughter of Scotland

Lady Elizabeth Bowes Lyon, as the Queen was first known, is the youngest daughter and the youngest child but one of 10 born to Sir Claude George and Lady Nina Bowes Lyon. Sir Claude in 1904 succeeded his father as the 10th Earl of Strathmore. At that time a Scottish barony it was in 1937 created the earldom of Strathmore and Kinghorne in the United Kingdom.

It has been pointed out both the King and Queen descended from Henry VII, the first of the Tudor Kings, through his marriage with Elizabeth of York in 1486. The Queen's father traced his descent from Sir John Lyon of Porteviot, to whom Robert II, of Scotland granted the lands and thanage of Glamis in Forfarshire.

The Queen, while properly a daughter of Scotland, in her early years saw far more of the placid scene of St. Paul's Waldenbury, Hertfordshire, England, than of Glamis with its rugged battlements and tragic story. Shakespeare placed the murder of Duncan by Macbeth at Glamis, though hard facts of history reduce it to a poetic legend.

During the Great War years Glamis was turned into a military hospital and Lady Elizabeth, her four brothers at the front, was a familiar figure around its great rooms.

"She had the loveliest pair of blue eyes I'd ever seen—very eloquent, expressive eyes that could speak for themselves," wrote a Gordon Highlander who was nursed to health and strength at Glamis. "She had a very taking habit of knitting her forehead just a little now and then when speaking, and her smile was a refreshment."

Incidentally a portrait of Clevehouse hanging in the old banquet hall of Glamis is a reminder that Elizabeth's ancestors fought valiantly for the Scottish crown. Moreover, portraits of the Stuart King are reminiscent of the days when the Queen's ancestors battled for the Jacobites against the English.
