—CHARGED WITH STARTING FIRE— A barn and 15 head of livestock, owned by Harry Ellis, were destroyed by fire at O'Leary late Tuesday night. Yesterday the owner's brother, George Ellis, was charged before J. Watson McNaughton, justice of the peace at Summerside, with "wilfully setting fire" to the building. The date for the preliminary hearing was set for December 10. No evidence was taken yesterday meanwhile George Ellis was released on a $2,000 bail bond. Fire in the barn was said to have been discovered by the owner when he returned home shortly before midnight. The blaze was declared to have made such headway that nothing could be removed from the barn. Included in the loss were reported to be 11 head of cattle, four horses, farm machinery and crop. There was no estimate available as to the amount of the loss. Charges against George Ellis were laid following investigation by Royal Canadian Mounted Police from the Alberton detachment. Harry Ellis lives about a half-mile from the O'Leary village. His brother, George Ellis, lives on an adjoining farm. Hea'h Strong, K.C., of Summerside is counsel for the accused.

—CORRECTION—In the case of Matthews vs. Matthews, which was concluded Monday night at the sitting of the Supreme Court at Summerside it was incorrectly stated in the Guardian yesterday that a verdict of damages for the plaintiff for $5,000 was returned by the jury. —LADIES BOWLING AT CAPITOL ALLEYS—The ladies continue to hold the spot light at the Capitol Bowling Alleys. The airmens wives teams have had some very close games. The Summerside ladies team played a picked team from the airmens wives on Tuesday the former beating the latter with a score of round 100. DELIGHTFUL RECITAL AT MISCOUCHE CONVENT

A capacity audience filled the hall of Notre-Dame Convent, Miscouche, when the pupils of the institution presented their annual musical recital.

From the little tots, for whom their teacher had chosen sprightly little selections, to the senior pupils who undertook difficult pieces, all did remarkably well. The "Rhythm Band", toy orchestra by juniors was rather out of the ordinary and showed painstaking study and practice on the part of the pupils as well as patience on the part of their instructor.

The hall beautifully decorated with red white and blue and V's as well as the delightful appearance of the pupils provoked very favorable comment from the audience.

The annual recitals at the Convent are always looked forward to with much pleasure and this year the program was perhaps more delightful. Some of the older pupils have been on the program from their first year at school and it is interesting to watch their progress in music.

The recitation items were other very enjoyable features. Reverend Martin Monaghan, D.D., Reverend W. E. Monaghan, Alberton, Mr. J. A. Bernard, Tignish, Mr. U. J. Pineau, Kensington, Mr. P. C. Martin, Miscouche and others present, extended hearty congratulations to the pupils and their teacher on their very excellent performance.

Heroes' Mothers Set Scholarships For Air Orphans

By D. E. BURRITT
Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON, Nov. 27 —(CP) —British mothers who already have contributed to this war "the sunshine of their lives" have evolved another means of further sacrifice. They have decided to provide scholarship funds for children of airmen killed since the beginning of the war.

The idea is that of Mrs. V. F. Gower, dignified little woman who lost one of her two sons on air operations back in the days of the Battle of Britain. First she organized the "Empire Mothers' Hurricane Fund" to help provide fighter planes when British supplies were not adequate.

Then, as the British air offensive gained power, Mrs. Gower witnessed the increasing casualties, many of them occurring in families with small children. It was a duty, she believed, that all mothers of airmen should see that airmen's children should not be deprived of education for want of money.

Laid Plan

So she again began organizing. Once more she called together the many women who had lost their sons and had contributed hastily to the Hurricane Fund. They got together one dull October afternoon in a hotel diningroom, the mirrored brilliance of which made it appear gaudy for such an occasion, and there laid plans for the scholarship fund.

It was an enthusiastic but melancholy gathering. Most women were elderly, many of them grandmothers. Mourning clothes were predominant at everyone of the 20 crowded tables. They listened as tribute was paid the men they had lost; the men who were the "sunshine of their lives"

Few Tears

But only occasionally did tears trickle down these wrinkled faces. And those came during the recitation of Kathleen Patridge's poem "To an Airman's Mother," which admonished:—

You are an airman's mother, with his honor in your eyes.
Whatever risk he takes you would not wish it otherwise.
If he can give his manhood, proudly carry duty through,
If he can keep his date with death
undaunted—so can you.

Then, Mrs. Gower told how it had been decided to open the fund to mothers—all mothers, whether of airmen or not—all over the Empire.

"If we British mothers throughout the Empire do our duty," she said, "then children of our heroes will not be deprived of their education; through this fund we shall lay the foundation for great men and women of the future."

Northwest

Tungsten-bearing veins discovered during the past two years in the Yellowknife-Beaulieu River area, Northwest Territories, are regarded by two geologists at the Department of Mines and Resources, who recently examined them, as a possible source of substantial quantities of tungsten, an urgently needed alloy metal. Approximately half of the 4,000-square mile region is underlain by rocks in which scheelite, the tungsten-bearing mineral, might occur, and within these rocks 400 or more veins containing varying amounts of tungsten have already been found. So far only about five per cent of the favourable ground has been carefully prospected for scheelite.

Most of the two hundred or more scheelite veins examined by A. W. Joliffe and R. E. Folinsbee, the two geologists, lie within ten miles of Gilmour Lake, which is 45 miles east of Yellowknife settlement. None of them is sufficiently large or rich to be mined profitably for tungsten alone, but by certain alterations in the equipment of one or more of the gold milling plants in operation, or to be erected in the region, high grade scheelite concentrate could be recovered. Some such arrangements are under consideration by the companies or syndicates concerned and any action taken will depend largely upon assay returns from samples already collected or being collected.

Scheelite was first identified in the region in 1939 in the Con mine in veins being mined for gold, and in the following year twenty tungsten-bearing veins were discovered near Gilmour Lake. It was not until 1941, however, that concerted efforts were made to search for and develop tungsten-bearing deposits. No veins of an obviously commercial character were discovered during this summer's field work, but the many occurrences within the small area intensively prospected are a favourable indication that there may be ecommercial deposits in the region, and accordingly it is recommended for further careful prospecting.

Tungsten is used chiefly in the making of cutting tools and of high quality steel. Canada's production of scheelite at present comes largely from certain gold mines in Ontario and Quebec and from tungsten properties in British Columbia, but the output meets only a small fraction of the domestic requirements.

Timing Of Move

However, officials here were not banking on the move having that effect. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, at a press conference, held out no hope that the Japanese reply to the United States statement of policy would be favorable.

Instead, he called attention to the wide gulf between Japanese and American viewpoints. The long months of futile efforts to arrive at some basis for negotiation were described by the secretary as a period of discussion and increasing confusion. The confusion, he said, grew partly out of actions by other governments—patently a reference to Japan's military moves.

If the lease-lend assistance to Turkey actually converts that country into a barrier to Germany's aspirations, it will be a stunning defeat for Nazi diplomacy. Franz Von Papen, who was ejected from Washington during the First Great War because he was suspected of plotting against United States neutrality, has been laboring with all the devices at his disposal to swing the Ankara Government over to the Axis side.

Opposing his efforts have been British diplomats and, it is assumed, the United States Ambassador, John V. A. MacMurray. In addition William C. Bullitt, former Ambassador to Russia and France, has just been assigned as a presidential observer in the Middle East.

Only a few days ago, Soviet Russia delivered at Istanbul, Turkey, the first shipment of Russian oil sent to that country since the Russo-German war began. This oil was delivered under naval convoy and the Russians were said to have promised much more.

Some apprehension has been expressed lest the recent conversations between Petain of Vichy and the Nazis might lead to active German control of the French fleet and Vichy territory in West Africa.

This might alter the Mediterranean situation dramatically in favor of the Germans, unless there were some offsetting development —such as an alignment of Turkey against the Axis.

It was learned that a quantity of equipment which was sent to the Greeks but which failed to arrive before their resistance to Germany collapsed has been held by Britain in Egypt and probably will go to the Turks.

The present Turkish army and air force was described as well equipped and these supplies probably will go chiefly into the material reserves essential before any army can undertake a campaign.

KEEP BATTLE READY —MRS. CHURCHILL

LONDON, Nov. — (CP) —"We shall feel as though the Kingdom of Heaven were at hand," when peace is declared, Mrs. Winston Churchill said at the opening of a Church Army sale. The Prime Minister's wife declared that "we must keep fighting-fit and battle-ready, and one day, when the bugle sounds 'cease fire,' we shall know that right has again conquered might."

Stress importance Of green feed In poultry diet

The tight, glossy plumage characteristic of the maturing pullet on good grass range is indicative of health and condition. Good feathering reflects condition in all bird life irrespective of age, sex, breed or variety. Poor feathering may be due to several factors, though errors in feeding are more commonly responsible than is generally recognized.

Experiments carried on at the Dominion Experimental Farm at Harrow covering hundreds of birds, and over sufficiently long periods, justify a fairly definite conclusion as to the value of various green feed supplements to the cereal ration, says W.T. Scott, Head Poultryman.

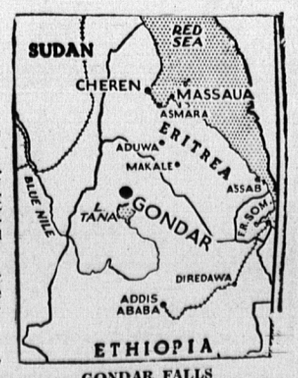
The average poultryman has not made much effort to take advantage of the most valuable green feed within his reach.

The value of good alfalfa hay has been proved. When the supply was unlimited the egg yield and increase in body weight were entirely satisfactory and the birds were in better health and condition at the end of their pullet years than they were on any other supplement or when green feed concentrates were mixed with the mash. Feather picking and cannibalism were entirely absent.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the value of alfalfa hay depends to a great extent on the stage of growth when it is cut and the conditions under which it is cured. If cut when it is young, it is rich in food value and comparatively low in fibre. As it matures the fibre hardens and much of the nourishment is lost. For this reason where it is available a second or third cutting of hay is better for poultry.

The experiments have given clear indication that when the alfalfa hay was cut in short lengths (3-4 inch), steeped overnight by entirely covering with cold water, and thoroughly strained just before feeding, greater quantities were consumed than when fed dry and better results were obtained. The supply was unlimited but the residue of stalks and stale hay was thrown out at each feed and a fresh supply was provided twice daily. For this purpose it was necessary to soak five pounds of good hay overnight to provide for one hundred birds.

As far as it has been determined the feeding of an unlimited quantity has no detrimental effect on the quality of the egg, although it will affect the color of the yolk and consequently may affect the grading.



GONDAR FALLS

The surrender of Gondar, last Italian stronghold in Ethiopia, will release thousands of British, Indian and East African troops for Libya, British military quarters said. The official announcement issued in Cairo said the final assault on the hold-out stronghold in northeastern Ethiopia was made principally by East Africa troops, who thus had "the honor of finally overthrowing Mussolini's East African empire".
