Planetary Life May Be Found By New Glasses

(By Edwin S. Johnson)
 TORONTO, Jan. 25.—The question of whether the planets are inhabited will ultimately be determined through the advance of astronomy, in the opinion of Dr. A. G. Chant, professor of astrophysics at the University of Toronto.

Research toward that objective has been carried on for many years and now with the advent of super-power telescopes Dr. Chant believes much information hitherto unknown about the nature of the planets and stars will be disclosed to curious mankind. But many years might yet elapse before a definite answer is forthcoming.

With the official dedication of the Dunlap Memorial Observatory at Richmond Hill, on the outskirts of Toronto, Dr. Chant will take his place among the world's leading astronomical research workers. The dedication, set tentatively for next May 31, will bring into operation the largest telescope in the British Empire, a reflector with a 76 inch mirror.

With his staff of expert assistants Dr. Chant plans to devote his first programme of research to spectrum photography of the stars. This, he said, is one of the most fertile fields of study, but the heavens offered such a vast opportunity for research that it would be almost impossible to set a prescribed object at any time.

Strange as it might seem, the Dunlap telescope could only function satisfactorily within a restricted field, Dr. Chant said. Its power was such that it must concentrate on the most distant celestial objects. He hesitated to speculate on the possibilities the new telescope opened up. Apart from the spectrum, much remained to be known of the nature of spiral nebulae, radioactivity, direct photography of faint celestial bodies and the study of super-novae or "star suicides." Fifteen of these have been recorded on astronomical photographic plates during the last 50 years. Super-novae are stars which explode into flame 100,000,000 times as bright as the sun.

"No, we will not be out scouting for new stars of planets. That is left for the real watchdogs of the sky, the amateur astronomers," Dr. Chant said. "Of course we may encounter the occasional previously uncharted star, but that will be primarily through accident."

Asked what he thought of the theory recently advanced by a Spanish scientist that the sun was a cold planet and possibly inhabited, Dr. Chant remarked: "I read about that, but quickly threw it aside as no much rot. Why, do we not get our heat from the sun and is that not proof sufficient that it is not a cold planet? As for the sun being inhabited, that is an old theory. Some have advanced the belief that sun spots are huge craters leading to the heart of the sun where life might be sustained. We cannot deny that possibility, of course, but if there is life there, it is such that it might beggar the imagination."

PATOU'S LATEST "FIND" IS AN AUSTRALIAN

Patou's latest "find" is the gorgeous blonde mannequin from Sydney, Australia, Margaret Vyner. She is the most photogenic figure that has come to Paris for a long time. No matter from what angle the cameras click they get perfect results.

One of her latest poses is peering over the back of a velvet chair, chin just grazing the chair, and perched upon her naturally wavy blonde hair is Patou's newest hat, a toque in claret cordor feathers. It is about the size of a cherry bowl and dips slightly over the right eye.

Miss Vyner had no idea of becoming a mannequin when she went with a friend of hers to see Patou's summer collection. She was on her

Declares Son Was Murdered

(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire)
 MAHONS BAY, N. S., Jan. 25.—"My boy was murdered," declared Frank P. Locke tonight as Royal Canadian Mounted Police continued investigating the mysterious shooting of 23 year old Lowell Locke of Lynfield, Mass.

"He wasn't the kind to commit suicide and he had no reason to do so," the grief-stricken father declared. "He was slain if he wasn't, what happened to his wallet and his money?"

Lowell Locke was found fatally shot early Tuesday morning in the home of his aunt, Mrs. Augustus Ernest, in the little village of New Cornwall, near here.

An hour after midnight the father was roused by a shout, and came downstairs to find the youth near death.

Lowell gasped only one word—"dad"—before he died. A discharged rifle lay some distance from the body.

The youth visited the neighboring home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bruhm the previous night, and Mrs. Bruhm told the police today she had heard her boarder, Miss Claudia Melser, tell him:

"Come, Lowell, back up. Get such nonsense out of your head."

Mrs. Bruhm had not heard the conversation leading up to the remark, she said.

The police interviewed Miss Melser, 23 year old school teacher and friend of Lowell. She had taught school the day of the tragedy but overcame with grief that night she had returned to her own home in Northwest.

Steamers Collide Mohawk Sinks

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—The S. S. Mohawk, her 100 passengers and crew taken to apparent safety in lifeboats following a collision with a Brazil-bound freighter a few miles off Eggert, N. J., sank late last night, coast guard and radio reports said early this morning.

In zero weather and with a heavy wind blowing and sea running, the Mohawk collided shortly after 9:30 p. m. E.S.T. with the S. S. Talsman, a Norwegian freighter.

At 10:40 p. m. MacKay radio advised said, she sank.

Several other craft in the vicinity hurried to the aid of the stricken vessel. The United Fruit Liner Limon and the S. S. Algonquin were standing by shortly, picking up passengers and crew from the Mohawk.

The Mohawk only five hours out of New York bound for Havana and Mexico, carried a crew of 107 and 53 passengers.

She was under charter of the Ward Line by her owners, the Clyde Malloy Line.

S. O. S. calls were sent from both the Mohawk and the Talsman. The latter later reported her bow was damaged but that she was not in need of immediately assistance and was standing by.

A few minutes after the S. O. S. the Mohawk advised the Limon: "heading for beach with bad list" and at 10:04 a message intercepted by radio Marine Corporation said: "Mohawk on the beach."

The cause of the collision was unknown. It was a clear night but a stiff northwest wind approaching gale proportions was hitting the entire Jersey coast line.

WHAT DO YOU MEAN BY IT

"Let the cat out of the bag."
 You know the expression, but do you know the meaning of it?
 Once upon a time, long long ago, when countryfolk were accustomed to take a suckling pig for sale to market in a bag, the pig sometimes really contained a cat.

These not very smart people would then look out for a customer who might easily be taken in—some one simple enough to buy "a pig in a poke."

If they succeeded in the fraud so much the more profitable for them. But if the prospective buyer, not quite such a fool as he looked, happened to insist upon opening the bag before putting down his money, the cat was out of the bag—actually as well as figuratively.

"Pig in the poke" is another form of the same phrase. "Poke" is a diminutive of pocket.

The French have the expression "Chat en poche."

PARIS SNAPSHOTS

Marcel Rochas brings a new note into evening fashions for the south with his organdy shirtwaist dance dresses.

Sheer woollens for spring are sheer indeed, for they look, as though they were striped with rows of hemstitching or made porous with eyel embroidery. It's all done on the weaving machines.

The belt line on spring dresses in Paris shows is one of the major style trends, and these are some of the new belts: Patou pearl chain belts, Schiaparelli transparent glass belts, Lanvin gold kid belts, and Violnet extra-wide suede and fabric belts.

Two new colors to register forcefully in the Paris collections are mango orange and muscat grape blue.

A new evening material from Schiaparelli is a double net that looks like transparent moire. A dark material from the same house is Danish linen. Worth uses glazed pique.

Small gingham checks are smart for afternoon and tablecloth checks for evening. They appear on all kinds of materials.
