

Get rid of constipation by internal cleanliness

HEADACHES, biliousness, sleepless nights, heaviness, are Nature's warning that intestinal poisons are flooding your system. If this is allowed to continue, you may become a victim of serious organic disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

WILD HORSES

By Henry Herbert Knibbs

Mrs. Johnson would tell Johnny. Grace Percival wondered what he would say when he heard the news. She was glad he was away, that she would not have to tell him herself. She was both glad, and relieved, because she really feared that should she see him again, some gesture, word or glance might persuade her that she could live in the picture and be content.

Gazing down the sleepy street toward the distant mesa wondering when the stage would come for her, wishing, in spite of her conclusions that she might see Johnny Trent again, even though she dreaded the interview, Grace Percival's brown eyes widened the slightest bit as she saw two horsemen drawing slowly toward Solano. As they came nearer, she saw that there was something familiar about the horseman who rode the big gray—a handsome animal, viciously active under restraint, difficult to handle. Unconsciously she clutched the arm of the chair.

One of the horsemen was Johnny Trent, returned from his quest. And the gray horse? Could it be the gray stallion? Johnny had said he would not return without the horse. If only he had returned a day later! Or if the stage had not been delayed for repairs! What could she say?

Down the long and all-but-empty street he rode, swaying to the restless lunge of the wild horse. Flecks of foam danced in the sunlit air close to him rode Frank Lopez, sitting his horse stiffly, yet as watchful as a coyote, his hand on the rope coiled at the saddle-fork. The stallion was wet with sweat. He tossed his head and his mane rippled along the great arch of his neck like flowing silver. And Johnny? He was the same—and yet not the same. Grace Percival saw—and realized that he had both lost and gained something. His face was less boyish, the quick laughter of his eyes was gone, his manner more subdued—yet against the loss he had gained a visible maturity, and with it something akin to the quality of the horse he rode. To Grace Percival it was so obvious that she caught her breath. While Johnny rode with quiet poise and lithe assurance, there was no trace of recklessness or unwarranted pride in his bearing—but there was evident a grim restraint of which she had not deemed him capable. She had begged him to come back to her. He had come back. Already she felt that his eyes ac-

Johnny sat the gray stallion like a conqueror. He had not offered to dismount. He was in the saddle, solid in his mastery, playing his own game and playing it well, although he did not realize it. And suddenly Grace Percival realized that no matter how much she cared for him, and how much he cared for her, her mastery of him could never become an accomplished fact. He was like the magnificent animal he rode, untamed, and would be so as long as he lived.

"No—he ain't a safe horse," said Johnny as though he had read her thought.

Grace Percival rose and drew a crumpled slip of yellow paper from her glove. The stallion jumped sideways as she reached out to give the paper to Johnny. "I wanted you to read it," she said.

Frank Lopez reined over and took the paper. As Johnny brought the stallion under control, he took the paper from Lopez. Johnny flicked the telegram open and read it. The stallion fretted and pawed the road. Grace Percival watched Johnny's face, her own eyes flashed, startled, and intense. Johnny Trent glanced up from the telegram, met her gaze, and she never forgot the look in his eyes. It seemed to her as though he was imperiously studying some curious object that he had just discovered and which puzzled him.

There was no warmth in his gaze, no sign of his earlier intimacy, no hint of his own silent fight with himself to keep from speaking. Grace Percival knew that the telegram was to him as transparent as crystal; that he read in it her excuse for leaving Solano, and through it saw the reason for her going. It was master of himself, she tried to vision his battle with the wild stallion, and she was horse-woman enough to know that it had been a bitter fight; and, with that, while the gray stallion subsided to being handled at the moment, he could never be tamed.

Again Johnny Trent seemed to interpret her thought. "Once in a while here's one you can't tame," he said, and as he spoke he swung down and stood beside the stallion. Before Grace Percival realized what Johnny intended, he had jerked the cinch loose. Simultaneously he slipped saddle and hackamore from the wild horse. For an instant the gray stallion stood motionless, not aware that he was free. Then, with a snort, he whirled, flung up his head and thundered down the street. He sped straight for the open mesa, for the hills beyond, boring into the west, growing smaller. Topping the distant mesa rim, he turned, the long, slanting sunlight of mid-afternoon rippling on his back, his shoulders, his mane like flowing silver. With high, disdainful crest curved like the arch of a drawn bow, with proud forefoot raised, he whistled a challenge; a living statue framed by the turquoise of the Arizona sky. Then with a lift and turn, he flung away into the spaces—a flash of silver-gray vanishing across the wild to seek his kindred and his home.

Wash Your Kidneys

By Drinking Water

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a doctor, who tells us that too much rich food for the kidneys, which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids; to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids and in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

Baby's restless nights might be avoided. Scalded skin and other skin troubles are common causes of restlessness, and often could be avoided by careful bathing with Baby's Own Soap. Its fragrant lather cleanses and heals Baby's skin, and prepares for restful sleep.

"Best for you and Baby too"

An Old Recipe To Restore Gray Hair

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will give a revelation upon it your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

For First Aid—Meador's Liniment.

IN MEMORIAM

MR. NEIL MCFADYEN

Mr. Neil McFadyen died at Summerside last Saturday night, having reached the advanced age of 81 years. He was the son of the Hector McFadyen and Margaret Bell, his wife. He was born in the year 1844 at Augustine Cove where he lived until 1908, then he moved to Summerside.

He married in 1874, Eliza Lowther who proved a kind and loving wife and most tenderly nursed him during his last illness. Two daughters survive him, Mrs. Hugh Morrison, Kensington and Mrs. Thomas D. Carruthers, Summerside. His family was composed of six members, the remaining ones being Mrs. Major Clark, Cape Traverse; Mrs. Sarah Lowther, Edmonton; Mrs. Eliza Richards, Regina; Mrs. Jane Lowther, Charlottetown, P. E. I., and Mrs. John McFadyen, Furburg, Sask.

Mr. McFadyen was a gentleman of marked ability, possessing more than ordinary intelligence. His sterling character was exemplified by strict honesty and undoubted integrity. A member of the Church of Scotland, he performed the duties of various offices in the church with undoubted merit. He served as Elder for years, and his support thus rendered was most beneficial. He bore his long and testing illness with that patience that is secured by a firm belief in the promises of God and in His fidelity to His word. The funeral services on Tuesday morning were performed by Rev. Ewen McDougall and interment was made in Cape Traverse Cemetery—Y.

MEN AND HORSES

How closely related is man to the more intelligent of the animals is seen in many of the ailments to which both are prone and the remedies to which they answer.

Doctors and veterinarians are oftentimes surprised to learn of the similarity of their methods of handling the ailments of man and beast. Sprains, burns, scalds, scratches and many other minor injuries, many everyday ailments, too in men and animals take the same course, and both answer immediately to the same treatment—Absorbine Jr.

Absorbine was first discovered by a very close student of the horse, W. F. Young, and by him, devoted to
