from Henrietta. There was also a note in Peter's small hurried writing. "What was Phoebe so sorry not to see you, but I'll be back soon and hope to then. Thank you for taking such good care of my girl."

CHAPTER XXIV

When the telephone rang Ben let the chair in which he sat facing his father across the grating fireplace and went to answer it. He was surprised to hear Peter's voice. "Ben, I've just come home. I've had a talk with Dad and Ruth and I'd like to see you if I can."

"I'll be over in an hour," Ben promised. He returned to the sitting room. "That was young Rosicki," he told his father. "Dad, let's go over there together right now. Joe Rosicki is willing to settle this whole thing out of court. It's to your advantage to do so. Why not get it over with?"

His father shrugged. "You're having a lot of fun, aren't you?" he said sarcastically, playing you lawyer role. But your's only making a fool of yourself, son." Ben stared at his father. He leaned forward in his chair. "Dad, why do you want to go on trying to buck this thing when all the odds are against you? Why don't you make a settlement with Joe? Gosh, don't you realize since his ownership of the farm can be proved, Joe Rosicki could make it pretty hot for you for selling the place. Don't you realize that he won't do it know. All he wants is his home back again. All you have to do is restore it to do." "It's the only thing you can do."

"And how about the Martins?" his father snapped. "They bought the place in good faith and paid me fifteen thousand dollars for it." Ben stiffened. "The Martins," he said, "are your concern, not mine. As well as I do that they'll accept the return of the purchase price and make no trouble. But you have something a little more than that on your hands. Because if you won't do the right thing by Joe Rosicki of your own free will, you'll be forced to it in court."

"And who do you expect will, as you say, 'force me'?" Mr. Prentice smiled. "Ben jumped out of his chair and stood before his father. 'I will myself. Dad, I'm not going to start by and see Joe Rosicki's whole life ruined. I'll bring you to trial before a jury and prove that farm belongs to Joe.'"

"All right!" he shouted. "Go ahead and stage your ridiculous trial. But if you think for one minute that I'm going to hand that property over to Rosicki and lose fifteen thousand dollars you're mistaken. Very much mistaken."

In complete bewilderment Phoebe looked at Peter and Henrietta. She couldn't make head nor tail of what they were saying. Ben having his own father arrested and brought to trial? No it didn't make sense.

"But it's true, Phoebe," Hennie said excitedly. "And I think it's the bravest thing I ever heard of!" "So do I," Peter said. "Gee, think of it! Ben's going up against his father in court. And why? Simply for the sake of fair play. He's not getting anything out of it for himself."

"Isn't that wonderful?" Henrietta demanded. Phoebe looked down at her hands. Her eyes were full of tears. "I guess it is," she whispered.

In Memoriam

GORDON J. SENTNER

A deep gloom was cast over the community and surrounding districts when they learned of the passing of Gordon J. Sentner, Loyalist, in his 54th year. In the passing of Mr. Sentner the community had a citizen of whom it was justly proud for all recognized in him a man of excellent qualities in business he was honorable, in friendship sincere and in all things he was noble and admirable. But it is in the home where he will be missed the most. He was a devoted husband and father. Although Mr. Sentner was in failing health for more than a year he was never heard to murmur or complain and when his friends asked him how he was it was always not too bad. Despite the best medical attention and constant loving care of his family he gradually weakened till on that beautiful Autumn afternoon October 20th, he peacefully breathed his last. Life's voyage was ended for a well loved husband and father. A mound of new red clay is beside that Church and where he early sojourn he sleeps near the scenes of his childhood. He leaves to mourn his sorrowing widow, two daughters, Jean, Mrs. Melvin Hyde; Elva, Mrs. Edie Thompson, both of Cornwall, also sisters and brothers, Ella and Phoebe, Charlottetown; Bertha, Mrs. Walter MacLeod, Brookfield; Ambrose and Hinson, Brookfield; Theodore and P. J. Sentner, Charlottetown; and several other men may read. The funeral was largely attended from his late residence. Service was conducted by Rev. J. R. Skinner, assisted by Rev. A. E. Todd and Mr. Donald Nicholson. He visited him during his illness and brought comforting messages to the bereaved. Hymns sung were: "The Lord is My Shepherd, I Shall Not Want, Safe in the Arms of Jesus." The pall bearers were six nephews, Gordon Coles, Leonard, Leslie, Lorne Coles, Preston Sentner, Murdoch MacSwain and Lorne Sentner followed by his mourners and friends. Burial was at Princeton Road Cemetery. He was mortal of one was laid to rest.
