Getting Nearer THE PERILS OF PAULINE

ISLANDER WRITES OF BIG BATTLE

The following letter has been received by Mr. John Smith, of Pownal from his grandson Walter Smith, a member of the 16th Battalion and who took part in the famous charge made by that regiment at Langemarck.

France, May 15th, 1915.
Dear Grandpa—I have sent you a few field post cards since the charge, which you have no doubt read about, by now, so I won't tell you much about it.

On the 20th of April we came out of some trenches near St. Julian for four days' rest, but on the afternoon of the 22nd, at 4 o'clock, the Germans started to drop "Jack Johnsons" into Ypres.

We were billeted just at the edge of the town, so had to leave in a hurry. We had no supper, and all I could grab was my medical haversack and some spare bandages.

We dug ourselves in on the other side of the Yser Canal behind a hedge running parallel to it and had just finished and begun to make ourselves comfortable for the night, when we received orders to move.

From there we marched to St. Jean, the Hunns dropping shrapnel pretty near us all the way, which wasn't very pleasant and from there we turned to the left and marched about five hundred yards where we were put in charging formation, passed the 10th Battalion and lay down in a field.

When the 10th advanced we were only supposed to act as supports and follow up, but somehow we overtook the 10th and went right through them and were all mixed up into one lot led by Col. Leckie. We made it together and when we got within about 200 yards of the German trenches, which were on the side of a wood the fire they opened on us was terrific, the bullets seemed to come like water from a watering can. Men were falling all around and I was looking for a nice soft place to fall, but I came through without a scratch—but some of the sights I saw that night!

We drove them through the wood and captured the 47 guns and then beyond the wood for about half a mile, using the cold steel at every opportunity.

We came back to the first trench we had captured and improved it. This we did until the morning of the 24th, when we were relieved by the 3rd Battalion, when we went back about half a mile and went into reserve trenches. These got under a merciless shell fire which I thought for a while would wipe us out, as they must have dropped shells every ten yards every minute.

It was awful, and how anyone could escape is beyond me. Our sergeant was hit while three of us were going out—he is now in the hospital in England.

On the night of the 24th ult., we went back about a mile more and were in the centre of about 10 batteries which were shelling all the time, and we got what was meant for the batteries most of the time.

We were relieved from there on

As they start out upon life's journey together they are followed by the very best wishes of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The Guardian extends to all its most hearty congratulations.

Rothchild's Way

In the year 1847, when the alarmists predicted a general European war, a great statesman well known to be nervous, rushed into Baron Rothchild's office in a state of great agitation. He said:

"We are going to have a war, a terrible war."

"But it is inevitable," continued the statesman, growing more and more excited by reason of the Baron's coolness. "I have just seen three members of the Cabinet who assure me that war will be declared within a week."

"No," replied Rothchild; "there is not going to be any war. I won't let them have the money."

ISLAND BOYS BRAVELY CARRY AMMUNITION THROUGH AN INFERNO

The following letter is from Spargeon Jenkins, son of Mrs. Robert Jenkins Marvin, and is from France:

May 9, 1915
Dear Mother:—Here I am some distance back from the firing line. We have come back for a rest and we needed it. I have no idea how long we will stay here, I am going to try and write you a long letter for once tonight. For a wonder we can lie down to sleep without the whine of shells in our ears: For the past three weeks we were under shell fire almost the whole time, but its odd what one can get used to. My chums and I have rolled into our blankets with the shells bursting within fifty yards of us, and slept like logs. "Birds," my chum often remarked "birds" we'd look nice if we woke up in the morning and found ourselves dead, many a poor fellow has gone to sleep and never awoken. Its funny what queer pranks shells will play, and every different kind has its own peculiar noise. One night while we were in a trench in a field in less than one hour we counted one hundred and thirty-one shells pass over our heads and burst among us. They make a noise for all the world like a dog when he objects to one playing a mouth organ. But we never really get used to it, you try and make yourself think you are hardened to it, but perhaps you don't cover your head with the blankets when you hear one passing by and bursting within a few yards of your sleeping quarters. I can't begin to describe the relief it is tonight to be able to turn in and sleep without being disturbed. I've had some very close calls since coming to France and I was beginning to think seriously of how long my good luck was going to last. When a fellow sees men blown to pieces almost at his feet and passes them lying by the roadside in all shapes it sets him thinking. The closest call I had was when a piece of shell passed through my cap. I'll never forget one night as long as I live, a certain battery was running short of brigade Ammunition Column got put out of action, and we had to take their place. The Germans were shelling all the roads and word reached us that an ammunition had to be supplied at all costs. It was one of the wildest rides I ever had or ever expect to have. We passed through a town that was a perfect hell of bursting shells. "Dante's Inferno" was a dream compared to it. We passed or rode over horses that were still struggling in their death agony "And men," but we'll not dwell on that. I never expected to come out alive but by a succession of miracles we got there and back without losing a man. Our Colonel told us we broke all records and did something that was never heard of before, took ammunition right up to the guns in open waggon. He could scarcely believe how we came through that trip with no casualties. All along the road we passed waggon and limbers that were completely blown to pieces and men that had all their horses shot, and had to leave their limbers in the ditch. It was hard to pass wounded men who were imploring you to pick them up, but it was impossible to stop for anything.
