BROWNIE NEWS

1st and 2nd Pack, St. Paul's... My: What a smart Pack of Brownies these are, every one in uniforms so spotlessly clean and freshly ironed, the whole lot looking considerably better on their Brown Owl, Fleur Hillon and Tawny Owl, Jean Moore and we must not forget their interested parents. Susan Whiteside, is Sister for the Fairies and Franky McPherson for the Bees and they take their good Sikers seriously as all good Sikers should, of course. Splendid Guides can be seen as they looked forward to the day when they could 'fly up to Guides'. Eight recruits passed the first test with honors, there was no hesitation in their answers and the following Brownies are very highly congratulated. Winifred Anne MacMillan, Marina Kays, Rebecca Nash, Carol Anne Hogan, Hazel Kays, Dianne Roper, Gay Williams, Pamela Peake. These are all Recruits and now are looking forward to receiving pins and being enrolled. All the Pack are working hard to get their Golden Bars. Singing Games were practiced for the Brownie Shield and very well carried out. The meeting ended with a truly wonderful Grand Howl for Mrs. Jenkins but in that Magic Tunnel I am sure that there must have been some lurking 'Boggarts'.

Chateau Sinister

By Louie Rittenberg

He turned suddenly on O'Hara: "After all, why do we worry? Isn't that our friend Welcome's job. He can stop Hussein leaving the country." "Can he?" O'Hara considered. "I'm not so sure. He didn't give me that impression when I left him in Camden Town early this morning. If Carnot of the Surete, doesn't recover sufficiently to give Scotland Yard the right to arrest Hussein, he can't be stopped. And if he's making for Spanish Morocco, once he gets there—" "He can go to the devil, if he likes, so long as he's on his own!" Rittenberg fumed, exasperated. "But—whatever happens—the's not persuading Caryl to go with him! Why, she must be stark, raving mad! What, in blazes, can have possessed her?" "Better to ask ourselves how we're going to stop it," O'Hara suggested. "If—as I believe—he's making for Spanish Morocco, how can he get there? He certainly wouldn't take the continental route, by way of France and Spain. He might charter a plane. But—why should he do that when he has a yacht lying at Falmouth? The damage to her has probably been repaired—" "Falmouth it is, I do believe!" Rittenberg agreed, and swung towards the door. "Let's waste no more time—" "Wait!" O'Hara interjected. "We'll waste a good deal of time if we don't tackle this in a level headed way. How are we going?" "By air. Only way to get there before he does, and that's what we need to do. Do I belong to an airman's club for nothing? I'm good friends with a fellow-member who's not only in town at the moment, but has a private hangar and landing-field inland, just behind Falmouth. If he and his bus are handy, the trick's done. Wait here till I phone you—" It was nearly an hour before he was through with his plan, an hour in which hope and despair alternated. In emergencies, nothing seems to work smoothly. Impossible, at first, to get hold of his fellow-member. Then, when at last located, he admittedly had his plane in town, but he himself was leaving for a few days in the north, and had intended to fly there. O'Hara had to press a meeting to explain the urgency of his own case, and went rather doubtful of succeeding. Then, at the meeting, he found the other had unexpectedly solved the difficulty. He was going by rail. If O'Hara cared to pilot his plane to Falmouth and leave it there, he was welcome to it.

HUSSEIN WALKS IN

Rittenberg at least was at the airport sooner than O'Hara had expected him. Equally unexpectedly, Virginia West accompanied him, drawing a somewhat startled remembrance from O'Hara. "You're not expecting us to take you along?" he questioned, seeing a little suitcase in her hand. "Why not?" she asked. "There's likely to be trouble. No spot for a woman," he predicted grimly. "Isn't Caryl a woman?" she countered calmly. "If she's in trouble, so can I be?" "Haven't I told you before, O'Hara," Rittenberg rasped, "that film-people—women as well as men—don't flinch from whole loads of trouble? It's the make-up of their very life. It's the way that fills their pay-envelopes, man! Virgie may prove more useful than you know. So—stop arguing, and let's get aboard this old bus of yours!" It was in fact a newish and very modern machine, for its owner was a man of very considerable means, and treated himself comfortably. The saloon, seating five, was fitted luxuriously. In fine flying weather, the take-off was excellent, and O'Hara was swiftly speeding westward into an on-coming sundown. Darkness had indeed begun to fall when they circled over tiny Falmouth harbour. Flying fairly low, they could see the white shape of the "Cleopatra" at anchor off shore, before they headed inland. O'Hara nosing around to locate his friend's private flying-field. With still enough light left to feel his way down on to this and effect a gappy landing more easily than he had expected on unknown ground, he handed over the plane to a man pre-warned to be there, and saw it safely housed. (To be continued)

British Scientist Believes Thinking Machine Possible

(By Alvin Steinkopf) LONDON, Jan. 13. (AP)—A British scientist says he believes it is possible to build a machine that can think like a human being. He is Dr. W. R. Ashby, head of the Research Department of Brunel House, a mental hospital at Gloucester, and others in a Bristol scientific society already have built a machine which they say is beginning to think. The gadget looks like four automobile batteries, over which are suspended magnets and inside which complicated electrical tensions are set up. How does it think? There is one condition of electrical balance in which the machine internally "feels" most comfortable, known as the most favorable situation. The extent of its thinking now is: When this condition is changed by moving the magnets or altering the flow of current, the machine of its own accord readjusts its many parts to a new favorable situation. In other words the gadget is like a cat at the firsides which moves around to a more comfortable position when it gets too warm in its attitude. Not much thinking perhaps—but pretty good for a machine, say the scientists.
