AFRICA FLIGHT

By Val Gielgud

When the planes landed, he was standing three paces behind Carol. They knew already that the party was safe. Awaiting handkerchiefs from the leading plane's cockpit had told them so much. And perhaps ten minutes of embracing, hand-shaking, saluting and expressions of pleasure by the Commandant occupied the time so exaggeratedly and completely that no-one of the newly rescued seemed to remember that three had gone before them, while only two stood there in the sunshine to welcome them back. It was in fact Otto Flesch, who, standing rather apart from the others, asked in his precise guttural voice whether the journey had been too much for Antony.

"Just lazy as usual," said Janet Manson. "Too lazy to come out in the sunshine and meet us."

"No!" said Carol. And to herself it seemed that her voice sounded curiously unreal.

"What do you mean, Carol?" asked her uncle. And her aunt peered at her sharply. Her ears were excellent, and she noticed an unusual quiver in the girl's voice.

But it was Larimore who answered, and Janet Manson saw her niece's cheeks whiten, and her hands jerk, as she spoke.

"I'm sorry to have to spoil our reunion with bad news," said Larimore deliberately. "But—Sothern's not with us. He—he couldn't make it."

There was a little horror-stricken silence.

"Not make it?" cried out Janet Manson, sharply. "I don't understand."

And she looked at Carol. But again Larimore answered.

"Sothern's dead," he said quietly. "And we owe him our lives—Carol and I. So incidentally do you all."

"I don't understand," said Hubert Manson, fiddling with his spectacles. "Tell us what happened, Larimore. This is quite dreadful."

"Yes—tell us, Mr. Larimore," said Janet Manson. And there was that in her tone which brought Carol's attention, focussed with a hideous intensity upon Larimore, upon her aunt.

"I shall have to write to his poor mother," added Hubert helplessly. Larimore jerked up his chin.

"He died for his friends," he said. "As I'd feared, the water was carried with us wasn't enough to bring the three of us through. I suppose Sothern fell in a way responsible for the fact that three of us, not two, had started. Anyway, we had a discussion—quite inconclusive—as to what must be done. During the night that followed Sothern was on guard. I woke and couldn't see him. Then I did see him moving away from the little oasis where we were camped that night. I followed him. I think he must have seen me. Anyway, before I could catch up with him—well, he had the pistols with him."

"You mean he killed himself?" "To let me take Carol on unhampered and with enough water—yes," said Larimore, firmly. "I was asleep," said Carol, hurriedly very conscious of her aunt's eyes upon her. "I heard the shot—I was terrified."

"Magnificent!" murmured Hubert Manson, in gallant fellowship. "A gallant exploit of your countrymen," said the French Commandant, his hand to his kepi. "One of our planes shall make a search for his body. Meanwhile, if I might advise you, you should not stand here in the sun after your trying experiences. And I must send a message so that cables may let the news of your safe return to England."

He led the way towards the gate of the fort. But Carol was conscious of two things: that the barrier between Rupert and herself had now taken concrete shape and hardness and that her aunt's brow was furrowed, and that her eyes were fixed steadily upon Larimore's shoulder-blades, as he walked ahead, as though seeking to penetrate the inner secrets of his heart.

CHAPTER XXV

SIR GEORGE IS PUZZLED

A little more than two months later, and a trifle after five o'clock in the evening, Sir George Manson was walking up and down his office. His expression was hard and that he would have or would have been to any onlooker—discouraging, if not actually moody. Three times during the last half-hour he had stretched out a finger which would have pressed the buzzer to summon Cynthia Wright from the outer office. Three times he had not pressed it, and returned to his gloomy pacing to and fro. He was thinking savagely. And yet, as he asked himself, pausing for a moment to stare out at the dusk falling over the river outside his windows, what the devil was there really for him to worry about? It was true of course that the Scout News and Notices. Special trains are speeding across Canada bearing more than 200 Scouts from ten Provinces to the First Canadian Boy Scout Jamboree at Connaught Square, near Ottawa, for July 16 to 24.

Jackson Dodds, C.B.E., of Montreal, Dominion Commissioner of Canada's Boy Scouts, sails from Montreal on July 15 aboard the S.S. Empress of France for England en route to Norway to attend meetings of the International Committee in 1947, was appointed Canada's first International Scout Commissioner last April.

The Canadian Contingent to the Fourth World Rover Moot in Norway, a group of 30 Rovers, sails from Quebec City on July 16, on the S.S. Sarnia for England, where they will join the British Contingent of more than 800 Rovers. The World Rover Moot will be held at Skjak, Norway, from August 2 to 12.

Three powerful searchlights will brighten the night skies over the First Canadian Jamboree. Viscount Alexander, Governor-General and Chief Scout, will open the Jamboree at 11 a.m. July 18. The National Film Board will make a documentary film at the Jamboree. Newsreel movies will also be taken as well as news photos.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's "Saturday Magazine" program on July 23, will be broadcast direct from the Jamboree at 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. E.D.T. on the Trans Canada network.

Greetings from Swedish Scouts great—and perhaps unduly-boomed—flight of the "Star of the East" had ended in failure. But there had been certain compensating factors: any awkward tendency on the part of the Press or the public to inquire into the merits of the crashed machine—and as a result into the standard of general accomplishment of Associated Airways Limited—had been most satisfactorily distracted by other happenings, with an obviously more popular appeal.

No one was likely to wish to read a dry-as-dust technical report, when there were to be had for the reading in the columns of every daily the account of Larimore's heroic desert march in the company of the even more heroic—and good-looking—girl, whom he was now announced as about to marry. While even the glamour and headlines of that engagement had in turn palled beside the sacrifice of Antony Sothern, who had "laid down his life for his friends." The lonely suicide in the desert had taken its place in the gallery of popular heroes beside the lonely figure of Captain Oates staggering into the Antarctic blizzard.

Judges Named For Halifax Miss Atlantic Pageant

(By The Canadian Press) HALIFAX, July 13—Officials of the Miss Atlantic Pageant, first international contest of its kind, tonight announced names of the five judges who will pick a Miss Atlantic here July 23.

The judges are Mary Fulton Frame, Canadian artist and native of Oxford, N.S.; Alfred C. Fuller, the original Fuller Brush man and native of Yarmouth, N.S.; Alberto Rodrigues, Cuban Consul-General to the Maritimes; Mrs. H. E. Kendall, wife of a former Nova Scotia Lieutenant-Governor, and Thomas S. Daley, Toronto theatre operator.

About 40 contestants, from as far south as Georgia, are expected for the three-day pageant, part of Halifax's bicentenary program.

There will be $2,700 in cash prizes, with the winner's take $1,500. The runner-up will get $500.

The contestants, who will be judged on talent and personality as well as looks, will be shown off to Halifaxians in two parades before the big night. Bands, R.C.M.P., the Junior Bengal Lancers and motorcycle police will lead the motorcade.

Sailors will be the escorts of the beauties at a ball July 21 at the Yacht Squadron. The Navy is expected to have no trouble getting volunteers.

The ball follows an afternoon of bathing-suit judging at a beach about 30 miles from Halifax. Bathing-suit-clad girls in the contest are to be kept from the eyes of the public. That judging will be done in a private and for the final judging next Saturday night the girls will wear evening dresses.

The pageant is being sponsored by the Halifax Men's Press club and the Halifax Women's Press Club and the Nova Scotia branch of the Canadian Women's Press Club.

When Money Takes Wings. MONEY takes wings today faster than ever before. True... many people are earning more—but the cost of living uses up a much greater proportion. Few indeed can hope to accumulate large sums for future emergencies.

How, then, can you ever hope to lay aside enough money to provide for your family in case of your untimely death—or for the years when your earning capacity will cease?

The only sure way is through Life Insurance. It would take years to build an adequate savings fund for your dependents, but a proportion of your savings put into Life Insurance will immediately guarantee to them a monthly income in case of your death. At the same time it will provide for your declining years should you live to old age.
