THERE'S NO FICTION ON M-G-M STARS IN "THOUSANDS CHEER"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the company which gave film audiences the first great all-star picture, "Grand Hotel", and presented star-studded sets again in "Dinner at Eight" and "The Great Ziegfeld," does it once more in the lavish Technicolor musical, "Thousands Cheer". The film, which is now showing at the Capitol Theatre, Summerside, contains virtually every star on the M-G-M lot, the studio of big stars.

Kathryn Grayson, Gene Kelly, Mary Astor and John Boles head the cast in the delightful tale of the Army officer's daughter who undertakes a morale job at her father's camp and falls in love with an ex-circus performer and proceeds to make him the best soldier in camp. In the course of the film a gigantic USO show is presented to the boys in camp.

Among those who appear in the many acts are Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland, Red Skelton, Eleanor Powell, Ann Southern, Lucille Ball, Lena Horne, little Margaret O'Brien, Marilyn Maxwell and Marsha Hunt and many others. Kay Kyser and his orchestra, Bob Crosby and his orchestra, Benny Carter and his band are among those who all perform.

Discipline is the foundation of all heroism, of all really good service to our fellow-men and the first condition of a noble sacrifice.

BUTTER—Pointing out that butter coupons in Ration Book No. 5 have no expiry date, the Prices Board advises consumers that these coupons are good for the purchase of butter until further announcement is made concerning their term of validity. To date no coupons in book five have been declared invalid.

P. E. I. Poultry Jottings

By F. G. WARD

Are producers planning to meet conditions that may beset the poultry industry in the post war years? If so is their effort a determined one, luke warm, or just complete indifference.

The Dominion Poultry Marketing Services together with the Poultry Services are already energetically delving into post war possibilities, but how futile will their efforts be if producers do not do their part.

A call has been issued to supply Great Britain with 600,000 cases of fresh eggs during the fall of 1945. That is the time Britain wants our eggs. That is the time when we can deliver our eggs at their peak of quality. What better opportunity have we to acquaint the people of Britain with the excellence of our eggs. Some producers will say we cannot produce fall eggs—have they ever tried—we know that fall egg production is a reality — last fall we exported to Britain 150,000 cases. True, none came from the Maritimes. You ask where do we enter the picture. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are deficiency provinces in respect to eggs and poultry, each fall large shipments of eggs are brought into these two provinces from Ontario and Quebec.

The eggs those provinces ship to the Maritimes should be shipped to Britain and we on P.E.I. should be supplying the deficiency of the other Maritime Provinces. If we on P.E.I. intend staying in the poultry business we must adjust our production to the requirements of our markets, that is just plain horse sense.

* * *

Can we produce fall eggs on P. E. I.? We most certainly can. We have a number of producers doing so. Their number is increasing each year, but not fast enough. There is not any secret to doing so—hatch your pullets early and given correct laying ration they will lay and lay plenty of eggs. They may have a period of winter pause—what if they do — they will lay again with renewed vigor later. There is much in argument both ways, but what is the sense in having your poultry lay the most eggs at a time when our chief customer (Britain) does not desire them. Let us change our trend of production to meet the need of our customers. That is sound business practise.

There is a great future for the poultry industry of P.E.I. Much depends upon the present freight rates on grain from the west being maintained. Our natural markets are the two Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland. What have we to fear — not much — Newfoundland imported from Canada last year 83,000 cases of eggs, only a small percentage came from P.E.I. The province of Quebec shipped 16 carloads there. The same may be said of our dressed poultry. Such markets will not come to P.E.I. just because we are a short way from it. We must cultivate such markets. They are our best.

Some one will wake up some day too late. Such markets will be lost.

If there is such a thing as a Chamber of Commerce operating here it is time that their thought became centered upon the possibilities of expansion of trade between P.E.I. and Newfoundland with regard to eggs and poultry. P.E.I. poultry products are of the highest quality. Eggs — dressed poultry — ca- d poultry.

We have received many enquiries regarding the possibility of securing coal for brooder stoves. One prominent coal dealer today advised me that he had received word from the office of the fuel controller stating that the coal companies had been advised to look after brooder stove coal requirements. Flock owners desiring such coal will have to sign a form declaring that such coal is for brooder stove requirements only. A word to the wise—don't leave obtaining your brooder stove coal requirements too late.

* * *

Blood testing for this season is about completed. Referring to the average of reactors in flocks supplying P.E.I. Hatcheries, a correction should be made. Last weeks jottings stated the average of reactors being 30 per cent. This should have read point 30 per cent. Flock owners should keep this very low reactor percentage in mind when making plans for ordering baby chicks.

Wedding Dress for Overseas Bride

OTTAWA, Jan. 25 — Carefully wrapped, properly mailed, officially received and receipted, a large un-military package arrived at the office of the Director-General of the Canadian Women's Army Corps in Ottawa recently. Defence Headquarters officials eyed it warily and proceeded to open with care.

Burrowing under layers of tissue paper they revealed "D for Dress," a beautiful egg-shell satin wedding gown. The gift of an anonymous donor, the lace-trimmed dress and matching hat were accompanied by a note which read: "This is 'D for Dress.' Please accept it for the Canadian Women's Army Corps overseas. I hope it will give as much happiness to the girls as it is giving me to send it."

The gown will be sent to England by the Auxiliary Services to be worn by altar bound members of the C.W.A.C.

Cold Weather Delays Output Of Spirits

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24 —(AP) — Because blizzards interrupted grain deliveries, this month's liquor-making "holiday" in the United States may produce less beverage alcohol than the August release of distillers, the War Production Board reported today.

Dr. P. Morgan, director of W. P. B.'s chemical bureau, stated, however, that W. P. B. does not plan to cut short the holiday, in spite of newly expanded military demands for war alcohol.

Beverage distillers and commercial alcohol plants made about 84,000,000 gallons of 100 proof spirits for blending into hard liquor in the August reconversion. This was estimated to be sufficient to release approximately one year's normal supply of whiskies, gin and cordials from warehouse stocks.

The January holiday was expected to provide a greater output because of improved war conditions but the persistent colder weather throughout the east interfered with railroad movements and so delayed shipments of grain to the plants that a somewhat smaller output of spirits now is expected, Dr. Morgan said.

CHAPTER XIII

There had been nothing in Peter's story linking the names of Jenness and Lentz. But the fact that Lentz, who had been indicted as an unregistered foreign agent, had been misusing the congressional franking privilege and that Jenness was a congressman's secretary was enough to turn the eyes and ears of the agitated countryside in her direction, and set all the tongues wagging. Moreover, the more alert followers of current events began to recall news items to which they attached little importance, to hunt up old periodicals and reread them in the light of the startling headlines which suddenly stared them in the face.

But Serena, usually so soft-spoken, could be tight-lipped too, and her well-known habit of making her rounds with despatch saved her from questions.

In spite of her alleged haste, however, she did turn in at the Abbott homestead, on the pretext of saying goodbye to Rhoda, who was about to leave for her school. With all the young people going to war she had been recalled to her old job and was now delighted preoccupied with her packing.

"Where is Dexter?" Serena asked. "I'd like to see him for a minute too, as long as I'm here."

"Why, he must be around somewhere. He's been saying he might start logging, but then he decided to put it off till next week. I presume he's in the barn. I'll call him."

"Don't you bother, Rhoda. I'll go right out to the barn myself. Good-by, if I don't see you again."

Good News

The two women kissed each other affectionately. But when Serena's hand was already on the latch, Rhoda detained her. "I didn't think to ask you before, Serena, what the latest news is from Fort Bragg."

Serena paused, her grave face brightening. "Why, it's good," she said. "Jerome and Alix spent the first week after they were married at the Officers Club or the Post. It must be a real pleasant place the way they describe it, with game rooms and a cocktail lounge and the like of that inside, and tenn's courts and a golf course right on the grounds."

"But of course they wanted something more homelike and private than that, and finally they found a little apartment in a big house that's been remodeled a-purpose to accomodate young married officers and their wives. It's in a small town called Raeford.

I gather from what they write that they're very nicely situated."

"I'm so glad," Rhoda replied. "Well, I mustn't keep you any longer, but I felt I just had to ask. I took such a liking to Alix, from her picture. Good-bye, again."

"Good-bye," Serena said, lifting the latch to go out.

She did not have to search far to find Dexter. She discovered him in the small room at the front of the barn which he used for an office.

"I declare, Dexter, you've made this little office real homelike! Nobody'd ever think it was in a barn."

"The barn's my natural province. Rhoda doesn't like to have me cluttering up the house," he said smiling. "I suppose I can, pretty soon. But I probably won't want to then. I'll miss her so I'll want to keep it just as she left it. I can't realize yet I'll be alone here, after tomorrow."

"But just for a short while, Dexter. Because pretty soon, you and Judith—"

Offer of Help

Yes, of course, Judith'll be here in no time at all. But I have an idea Judith won't want me to clutter up things either. I have an idea she likes a tidy house, too."

"Yes, she does. It was about you, Dexter, I wanted to see Judith,

"I'm very glad I was afraid it might be about Jenness. Of course you know if there is anything on earth I can do—"

"Yes, of course I know that. Daniel knows it too. It's—it's considerable comfort to us, Dexter, because we don't know what's going to happen next, as far as Jenness is concerned."

"I blame myself because I didn't say anything to you, of my own accord, before you got this awful shock. I read more papers than you and Mr. Farman. I was afraid something like this might happen. In fact I hinted as much to Jenness when I met her at the Junction. But she wouldn't take me up on it. She won't talk to me freely any more, the way she used to. I tried again to make her, when I was driving home after she'd left MacDonald at the airport. But it wasn't any use."

Serena nodded. "I know. She won't talk to her father or to me either except to say that she knows that Horace Vaughn will look out for her and that this is all a lot of nonsenes anyway. But she's terribly frightened, we can see that. And tomorrow she's going back to Washington. I'm frightened myself, Dexter, to have her go."

Bad Company

I suppose it's the best thing she can do. She's got into bad company. I'm afraid there's no doubt of that. Not only in Washington. Here too. I saw her myself with a man I didn't recognize, one after noon when I was coming home from the Junction. She was strolling alone beside the brook in the big Field."

Serena looked at Dexter with dumb misery in her eyes. He pressed the work-worn hand he was holding.

"That doesn't mean anything in itself, you know," he said gently. "I wouldn't have given it a thought, if she hadn't stepped behind some bushes as soon as she heard a car coming, and beckoned to this man who was with her to hide too. Normally Jenness would watch to see who was in the car, and if it was anyone she knew she'd have waved and shouted."

"Yes," Serena said unconvinced. "She always has been secretive. So if she hid when she saw you coming—if she's been meeting someone on the sly—why, that would explain what Peter meant when he talked to Daniel about her seeing Lentz here, and about that wicked man's 'quiet rural activities!'"

"It might. Nothing's certain yet. Mrs Farman. We don't know that's she's done anything wrong herself. We can still go on hoping she hasn't."

"Yes, we can still go on hoping. But from what you've just told me, things look pretty bad, even worse than they did before. And Daniel thought anyhow that maybe he ought to start making plans to go to Washington. He thought maybe I ought to go with him and I agreed. Just in case anything should happen, you know. Because it wouldn't be so easy to get away, all of a sudden, unless we did plan beforehand, what with no help on the farm and—and all."
