SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON X. DECEMBER 8. THE CHILD IN THE MIDDST. GOLDEN TEXT. "In heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father who is in heaven."—Matt. 18: 10. POINTED SUGGESTIONS. By Rev. D. W. Snider. There are those who are slow to ask questions because of the fear that the questions they would ask might reveal their ignorance—that is the unteachableness of pride; pride bedded in ignorance.

But where pride, or false ambition, in unwilling to betray ignorance it is quick to assert its claim to distinction and privilege. The questions, therefore, which men ask are always in some measure a revelation of character. The humble and teachable ask questions in order that they may add to their stock of useful information; the ambitious and proud in order that their claim to recognition and their place of distinction may not be overlooked or side-tracked.

How far astray from God, from God's will and God's way the push of worldliness upon the hearts of the proud takes them is brought to light by the manner in which Jesus meets such questions as they ask. The lesson scene is significant in this regard. What an arrest was made of the vain musings and whispered discussions of the disciples! Jesus brought them to a decisive halt. Their questions were wrong, and their hopes and aims and fears. They were so far wrong that they had not yet entered the kingdom in which they were seeking to learn what was the place their worthiness would best.

The kingdom of heaven belongs to the child-like. What is child-like must be studied from the life of the innocent and unstained, and ambition holds no sway. It must be studied in the open-eyed, teachable, trustful simplicity of child life. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," if the child which Jesus placed in the midst had realized that it was a pattern for others, that fact would have destroyed the purpose for which Jesus placed it in the midst.

And just as the little children are towards instructors and parents, so should those who would enter and partake of the kingdom of heaven be towards God and the instruction and illumination of the spiritual.

God means the salvation of the children and of the child-like. The faith of such shall save them. And he has an uttermost condemnation for those who would destroy their faith or trap them into worldliness. Whatever defeats or spoils child-like teachableness, and power of faith comes from a character which is unworthy of life. Better he had never been born.

And lest any fall into that unutterable condemnation he must deal sharply with himself. The will must be exercised to the fullest and speediest power of its resolution against that which belongs to one (whatever it be, though dear as hand or foot or eye) which would snare one's soul or the soul of another, scandalize, offend or cause it to stumble in the ways of righteousness.

Future punishment is quite sufficiently indicated in today's lesson as one of the teachings of Jesus to satisfy any of His followers that there is a place and condition of irrevocable and retributive suffering without amendment and unceasing for those who disobey God.

The rights of the children may well form a close and earnest part of the study of this lesson. What are the rights of children with reference to their birth? their food and clothing? their schooling and their labor? their relation to the kingdom of heaven? Whatever agencies as a social science may stand for—Jesus loves the children.
