fight it out with the Austrians alone we should witness a speedy turning of the tide.

The Teutonic allies, however, may not continue their offensive after the fall of Warsaw. Once the Polish capital is occupied, Germany may decide to intrench and stand on the defensive, and this would undoubtedly release a certain number of men for the western campaign.

But the mere holding of the present German line calls for very large forces. From the Baltic, through Poland, to where it links up with the Austrians, the German army stretches on a front of between five and six hundred miles. Even if thinly held, this must call for a minimum of a million men.

So that if we imagine German's sending half a million men from Russia into Belgium and France, the estimate is generous. It would mean, then, that the fall of Warsaw would not increase the German strength in the west by 50 per cent., as the Mail pessimistically forecasts, but by less than 20 per cent.

Unquestionably half a million men in the able hands of the German General Staff will give a good account of themselves. But it is a question now of the total additional pressure which the Allied line in the west must expect to face.

BEAVER FLOUR is a real friend to home cooks

YOU can depend on "Beaver" because it is a perfectly balanced flour. It has the real homemade flavor of Ontario wheat and the extra strength of Western wheat.

This is true because these two varieties of wheat are blended before being ground. Thus "Beaver" Flour has the flavor of the Ontario pastry flour, with the increased strength due to the addition of western wheat.

Being always blended in exactly the right proportions, "Beaver" Flour is always the same. You can depend on it for all your baking. Ask your dealer.

SIR R.L. BORDEN AT CANADA CLUB LUNCHEON

MONTREAL STAR OFFICE, 17 Cockspar Street, London, August 6.—Sir R. L. Borden made the fall of Warsaw the theme of an inspiring message from Canada to the British people at the Canada Club luncheon today. He said:—

The fall of Warsaw has been overshadowed for some time, but it is useless to deny the significance of the event. The Germans have achieved the success which they vainly attempted months ago. It will not in the least daunt our courage, but only spur to greater efforts and increased determination the peoples of these islands and the Overseas Dominions.

SOME MISCONCEPTIONS

"Many previous German misconceptions have counted strongly in our favor, and if we have had disappointments, they have had infinitely more."

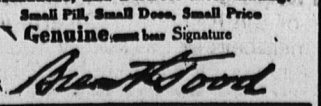

There certainly have been misconceptions among the Allies regarding the overwhelming importance of machine guns and ammunition.

"We in Canada had no difficulty in providing men, but such a war of science and chemistry found us also unprepared."

"It is my profound conviction, after seeing the British and French forces in field and camp, that regiment for regiment, and man for man, our forces would more than hold their own when faced by the Germans, but the whole power of the nation must be brought to the task. (Loud cheers.) We are unitedly determined. Not one necessary step to ensure an honorable and successful issue, upon which we are unitedly determined. Not one moment must be lost in that great purpose. If we really grasp the seriousness of the situation, there should be no reasonable doubt of our ability to accomplish this end in the early future." (Renewed cheers.)

WHAT WARSAW MEANS TO THE ENGLISH PEOPLE

(New York Evening Post) In Belgium and Northern France the Allies are undoubtedly bracing themselves for the new German offensive.

That such a blow will come is recognized on all sides. The question is how severe will be the German onset. The most pessimistic view on the Allied side would be that taken by the London-Daily Mail, which spoke the other day of "What Warsaw Means to You," yet being the English people.

"If Russia were forced far back, months would pass before she could resume her offensive. All through these months the Western Allies would have to face the full violence of the German blow."

They have so far been fighting only two-thirds of the German army. If at this juncture the entire German army is flung upon them, the strain will be terrific.

Two assertions need here to be examined: Whether it is true that the western Allies have been fighting two-thirds of the German army, and whether it is likely that the remaining third of the German army can be hurled against the Anglo-French line.

In attempting an estimate of the total number of German troops now in the field we have fortunately some fairly authoritative data to build on. This morning's dispatches from London quote the figures cited by a member of the morning's dispatches from London the figures cited by a member of the British General Staff in the course of certain prize court proceedings.

According to these figures, Germany now has 4,000,000 on her two fronts and in garrisons in Belgium, out of a total of ten million men engaged in serving the Kaiser, including the men in the coal fields, in the munition factories, and on the railways, as well as troops in training. Now, the court proceeding referred to is one in which it would be the purpose of a British Government to show as large a proportion of the German population as possible working for the Kaiser elsewhere than in the trenches, so that our staff officer's estimate of the men actually on the fighting line may be as high as possible, and we may place the German active army nearer to five millions than to four. Estimates by correspondents recently from the front run somewhat higher, but as they probably take in the troops in garrisons in Germany, and on the lines of communication, the difference is not very great. These results are confirmed by general considerations.

The maximum effort of a nation at war has been placed at ten per cent. of its population. In the case of Germany, that would mean a little less than seven million men. German casualties by this time must be well over two and a half millions, which would leave about four millions and a half. Add the return of the slightly wounded, and get once more our five millions, roughly.

How are these men distributed? We may say at once that the numbers engaged on the eastern front have been exaggerated. Reports which speak of six million Austro-Teutons pressing on against Russia are absurd. Only the other day Petrograd spoke of seventy German divisions acting in conjunction with the Austrians. Seventy divisions would mean about 1,400,000 men. Therefore, the German strength in the east may be reckoned as between a minimum of a million and a half. If we take the latter figure, it leaves three million Germans for Belgium and Northern France facing a French army of perhaps two and a half millions and an English army of unknown strength, but more than three quarters of a million. It is true that Berlin has been speaking of the very small numbers with which the Allies are being held in check in the west, but such statements must be taken with extreme caution. If, then, we assume three million Germans in the west and a million and a half in Russia, the first assertion by the Daily Mail is justified. The Allies in the West are facing only two-thirds of the German army.

It is quite a different matter to speak of the eventual transfer of all of Germany's troops from the east to the western front. Such a development could follow only one contingency; not merely the capture of Warsaw, not even the destruction of the present Russian army, but the complete subjection of Russia to the point where she would be forced to make peace. That is an impossibility of the near future. We know what the spirit of the Russian people is today. The war will go on; and not only that, but the destruction of the Russian army is as yet a remote possibility. Whether on the offensive or in retreat, Russia will keep engaged, not only the Austrian armies, but a large proportion of the German forces. One thing that certain is that, without the steady influence of the German troops, the Austrians cannot be depended upon. It was Mackensen who broke the Russian line in Galicia in May. Again it was Mackensen who came to the rescue, when the Russians, after two weeks of steady defeat, turned upon the Austrians near Krasnik and inflicted a defeat which German aid averted from turning into a possible disaster. It is plain even today that if the Russians were left to
