BELL BEING RETUNED FOR PEACE CELEBRATION

The six old bells of Westminster Abbey are to be restored and augmented in time to take part in the celebration that will follow the signing of peace.

The old bells are of great historic interest. All except the treble were cast at the old Whitechapel Bell Foundry—the tenor, weighing 14 tons in 1758, the fifth in 1598, the fourth and second in 1743, and the third in 1648. The treble was cast probably at the end of the thirteenth century or the beginning of the fourteenth century, and must therefore have rung out to celebrate the great victory over the Spanish Armada in 1588.

Two smaller bells to complete the octave are to be added; the old bells will be returned, and rebung with entirely new fittings and framework. The old small bell to take its place successfully in the octave, will, at the suggestion of the founders be preserved and a new bell cast in its place.

It is interesting to note that the Whitechapel Foundry, which has been working continuously since 1570, has been entrusted with the restoration work and the casting of the new bells. The connection of the old firm with the Abbey, after nearly 350 years, is thus being continued.—T.M. Bits.

THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

ANXIOUS DAYS

CHAPTER LXIII

What did it all mean? If I asked myself that question once, I did twenty times each day until Nell returned. I had seen Lorraine again and while neither of us mentioned Nell, his business, we were both all at ease, and unconsciously aware that the other was thinking of our last conversation.

Blanche Orton had called. She was very dejected as usual, yet I thought I detected an undercurrent of interest. It seemed as if she wanted to say something to me, was right on the verge several times, then caught herself just in time and uttered a silly platitude instead. I became embarrassed and appeared to even worse advantage than I usually did when she was. This annoyed her exceedingly, and I became more brusque, colder, until she left.

"She will think me a silly jealous fool!" I said aloud as I from the window watched her car glide away from the curb, "and she is right! I am a silly bounding fool!"

Some way it comforted me to call myself names, strange as it may seem. It took away some of my fear that Nell had done wrong. It was so easy to do and say things which others misconstrued. Of course the people who criticized Nell understood nothing of his business—on else they would not have criticized.

Father used to say that everything came to him who had patience to wait. Well I would wait awhile, not long, before I tried to break into society. In the meanwhile would cultivate two or three rather impetuous members of the 490, and would tell Nell what people were saying, and warn him to be more careful of his associates, and ask him to remain away from Blanche Orton.

I had a queer feeling that, in some way everything now revolved about his acquaintance, his friendship for her. If he dropped her, all the other gossip would die a natural death because there were no foundation for it. With her there was cause for talk, even though his friendship were the most innocent thing in the world. Blanche Orton was either loved or hated, and for the same reason—because of the unconventionally narrow women and men hated her. Those who would have been as unconcerned as she had they dared, loved and admired her. To both she was interesting, because she dared do as whom they envied—she dared do as she pleased. In other words she had the courage of her convictions. Even Lorraine Morton, the most particular, the most conventional woman I knew liked her. She had said so even while finding fault with her for receiving Nell and his vulgar friends.

Just why I should constantly wish for Mr. Frederick I could not have explained had I tried. But not an hour passed of the days while Nell was away that I didn't long for him. Yet had he been with me, I should scarcely have known how to put my fears into words. They were there, phantom ideas, unformed thoughts, unhappy suggestions. But having a thing in one's mind, and giving expression to it are two totally different things, especially when the man you love, the father of your child is the man.

That fate held the threads of my life in her fingers, ready to draw them out one by one, or loosen them altogether I gave no thought. Then I picked up an evening paper. It held headlines I read:

"Man accused of fraud upon millions. Promoter under arrest charged with selling stock in oil wells that never existed. Chief as yet pretty paper," etc.

My heart stopped beating. Suppose it were Nell. I scarcely dared read the article. The man's name had not been mentioned in the headline. I read it every word. It was a man named Carter who had perpetrated the fraud. Almost unconsciously I murmured "thank God." Yet I kept on reading. It might give me some idea of the kind of man Lorraine and others thought Nell to be, simply because he was like this man Carter, a promoter.

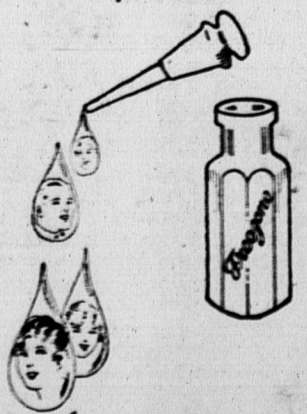

When I finished the column article was sick really sick. It gave me more of an insight into "crooked deals" as the writer called them, than ever I had had before. He, the writer, had called Carter "lick" a "schemer" and other names far from complimentary. I shuddered as I thought that was the way people thought of Nell. Then I grew indignant that all promoters should be classed as "crooked" because of men like this one. There were dishonest men in every profession, every trade, that did not necessarily mean that all were dishonest. The same principle must apply to men who promoted big business.

LIFT OFF CORNS WITH FINGERS

Doesn't hurt a bit and costs only few cents

You'll laugh. Apply a few drops then lift sore, touchy corns right off. No pain. Yes, magic!

A few cents buys a tiny bottle of the magic Freezone at any drug store. Apply a few drops of Freezone upon a tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly that troublesome corn or callus stops hurting then shortly you lift it out, root and all, without any pain; soreness or irritation. These little bottles of Freezone contain just enough to rid the feet of every hard corn, soft corn, corn between the toes and the calluses on bottom of feet. So easy! So simple. Why wait? No humbug!

Proceedings in the Provincial Legislature

The Government he went on to say that the Government had been found altogether wanting insofar as doing any thing for the Province was concerned. During the past year he said no great public works had been undertaken although the present Government had a revenue of $200,000 more than the Liberals. The Leader of the Government as a consequence he said, would be expected to show a state of finance justified by this lack of expenditure.

After paying tribute to the memory of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the late Mr. Hubert Howatt and Captain Joseph Read, Mr. Johnston said it was a good thing at this time to have a free and easy discussion on various matters—it was to use his own words—a proper thing for members to "ventilate" themselves. He declared it was not his intention to rehearse old subjects which had been already thoroughly gone into. With that he started in by looking back to the year 1915 and quoting a platform as published in the daily Examiner of that year. It was laid down among promises of that time if the Conservatives were returned to power the ere of deficits would be closed. Through they have obtained a general subsidy of $100,000 and or $30,000 for agriculture yet they have failed to discharge the debt of the Province. They failed in all promises in regard to economy and had not constructed one public work. The Government of today, with not enough money to pay the teachers a living wage were the successors of that regime. The Government he also claimed had obtained power under false pretences. The public finances he went on to say, were not available when they went to the country in 1915. The public records a few weeks later showed the darkest page in our islands history—a deficit of $93,000. Then followed a regular ory of disappal in the way of spending money upon public roads and bridges.

After quoting further from records of years gone by Mr. Johnston stated that this would be the last session of the present parliament and said that the public works had been starved, the teachers were starved and the roads and culverts were starved.

Referring to the Dominion grant for permanent highways, the speaker held that this province is in a peculiar position as regards its roads and soil, and there is not the necessary material here for permanent road-building. He did not think the province should be controlled in the expenditure of the money in the same way as the other provinces, where there are large arteries leading from ocean to ocean.

In reply to this the Premier informed the speaker that he had tried his best to have this idea carried out but was told it could not be done, as

The Government was determined to give no special privileges to any province. Mr. Johnston also touched on the question of our claims at Ottawa, the ending of the war and the rehabilitation of the returned soldiers.

He commended the Government for the interest being taken in this last matter, and said they would always find the Opposition ready to join hands with them in anything that could be done to settle them in this province. The speaker concluded by complimenting the Premier on the tact, ability and dignity with which he has conducted the affairs of his important office.

MR. J. A. DEWAR spoke next. He regretted that the Legislature had not been called earlier, and said the tendency was to meet later every year. If it continued he thought it might be as well to return to the old fiscal year.

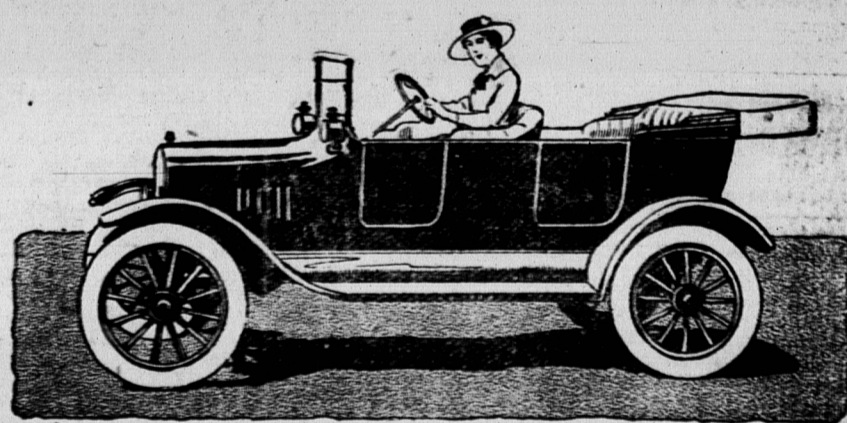

He paid eloquent tribute to the late Mr. Howatt, and Mr. Dougald Currie, sergeant-at-arms, the late Captain Joseph Read and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Mr. Dewar then proceeded to make some explanation in reference to the recent convention at Carleton Place. He declared that he was in favor of calling this convention. The convention lived five miles from him, and came to consult him. The answer Mr. Dewar gave was that he was not particular; if anybody wanted the convention they could have it. The coast seemed clear then, but squalls came later. A hotbed of intrigue was uncovered. "The convention was packed with men unfavorable to me," said he, "but the best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft agley." Some men thrown down stay there, he said, but in others the rebound puts them up again. He was not downhearted and predicted for himself a return with a greatly augmented majority.

The balance of his address was mainly an eloquent peroration on the successful termination of the war and the heroism of Canada's sons. He touched on transportation and said the principal question before this province is the standardization of the railroad. In reference to the Dominion he was doubtful if it should be accepted and if the Dominion government should have offered it. He hoped before accepting it the Premier would take the people fully into his confidence as to how it should be spent on the roads.

MR. A. E. McLEAN followed with a lengthy address in which he stated that the views of the last speaker were largely the same as his own. He referred to most of the points in the draft address, the war, the Land Settlement scheme, education, the grant for roads, etc., concluding with a strong eulogy in honor of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

MR. JAMES PATON was the last speaker, and, referring to the victorious conclusion of the great war, pointed out the great luxuries and privileges which are enjoyed in this province as compared with the Old Land, where the people have been on rations so long and have to put up with many disabilities as a result of the war. House adjourned at 11:30.
