

HIS GREATEST ROLE IN A THRILLING AMERICAN PICTURE!

THE DUGIE SOUNDS

starring WALLACE BEERY

with MARJORIE LEWIS
GEORGE MAIN • STONE • BANCROFT
HENRY O'NEILL • DONNA REED
CHILL WILLS
WILLIAM LUNDIGAN

PRINCE EDWARD — 2 DAYS ONLY — TOMORROW

MOST EXPLOSIVE THRILLER SINCE 'LITTLE CAESAR'S'

ROARING REIGN / ROBERT TAYLOR-TURNER

Johnny Eager

A MERVYN LORRY Production WITH EDWARD ARNOLD

FINAL SHOWING TO-DAY

MATINEE 2.30
EVENING 7-9

Extra-Musical
Don Cossack
CHORUS

A PLANE-LOAD of MYSTERY and HEADLINE HISTORY!

A happy-go-lucky adventurer and five million dollars in jewels... In the thrill trip of the year!

BOMBAY CLIPPER

with William GARGAN
Irene HERVEY

CHARLES LANO
MARIA MONTEZ
MARY GORDON
LYDD CORRIGAN

Capitol - TO-DAY - FRI SAT.

Chap. 1 Of The New Serial—SEE IT NOW

ROARING INTO NEW THRILLS... ON THE SCREEN!

DON WINSLOW OF THE NAVY

with DON TERRY as Winslow
JOHN LITEL as Morlin
CLAIRE DODD as Mercedes
ANNE NAGEL as Misty
SAMUEL S. HINDS as The Admiral
WALTER SANDE as Pennington

12 BLAZING THRILL-CHAPTERS

SHOWS 2.30-7-8.45

TWO TOP WESTERN STARS In One Rhythm-Rocking Saga!

ELLIOTT RITTER

KING OF DODGE CITY

with JUDITH LINDEN • DUB TAYLOR

EMPIRE TO-DAY — SHOWS 7-8.45

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—NOVA SCOTIA

FERRY SERVICE

VIA WOOD ISLANDS, P. E. I.—CARIBOU, N. S.
M. V. "PRINCE NOVA"

"The Connecting Link Between These Provinces."

Daylight Saving Time—Sundays Included

Leave Wood Islands 7.00 a.m. 11.00 a.m. 3.00 p.m.
Leave Caribou 3.00 a.m. 1.00 p.m. 5.30 p.m.

LUNCHES SERVED

NORTHUMBERLAND FERRIES LTD.
CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. I.

MAPLE PLAINS WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The monthly meeting of Maple Plains Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Farnell McCarville on June 24 with a hundred per cent of the members present and a number of visitors. The meeting was called to order by the president and opened by singing the Institute Ode followed by the Creed

CENTRAL GUARDIAN

This column is reserved for news of local interest, but advertising of a new venture may be inserted at a special word, strictly payable in advance.

COOK'S for Photographs. L-593
CONFEDERATION LIFE INSURANCE. L-978

POLICE COURT— At the City Police Court yesterday one drunk was remanded.

ORANGE SERVICE in the Kirk, D. Ave., July 12th at 7.30 P. M. Rev. Mr. Wright, preacher. 7-9-21.

STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL Government House Grounds, in aid of Red Cross War Work, Thursday, July 9th. If not fine Friday. Admission 25 cents. 4 to 9 P. M.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF CANADA. — Marshfield Pastoral Charge services for Sunday next are 10.00 a.m. at Stewart St. M. Highfield 3.00 P. M. and Marshfield 8.00 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to all members and friends to meet with us. The Rev. Henry Baak preaching. 7-9-21.

WEDDING BELLS — BURNS-SHAW—A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at North Bedeque United Church, Manse, on June 9th, 1942, when Rev. D. F. Hodgett, united in marriage Una Elizabeth, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Burns, of Freetown, to Robert Bayfield son of Mr. and Mrs. Bertram Shay, of Portage. The bride looked lovely in a British Navy sheer chiffon dress with navy accessories to match. She was attended by her cousin, Miss Evelyn Burns, the groom was supported by Miss Elsworth. The groom's gift to the bride was a lovely fountain pen and the bride's gift to the bridegroom was a lovely gold necklace. After the ceremony the happy young couple left for a honeymoon trip to Springhill, N.S., to visit the groom's relatives. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents for the bride party. For travelling the bride wore a light blue coat with navy accessories. After they returned home a wedding supper was held at the home of the bride's parents to a few intimate friends. Those assisting in serving was the bride's cousin, Miss Muriel Burns and the groom's sister, Mrs. George N. Reeves. The happy young couple will reside in Freetown.

JUNE WEDDING.—A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents, Wednesday, June 17th, at 5 P. M., when Rev. J. H. Bishop, united in marriage, Miss Annie Christina Aiken, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aiken, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Aiken of Stanchel, to Mr. George Maxwell Davey. To the bride, all left wearing a white dress by Mrs. Ralph Burns, the bride entered the room, on the arm of her father, who was wearing a white suit and a corsage of pink roses, she was attended by Miss Elsworth, the bridegroom, Mr. Elsworth, who wore a pink shirt, with white accessories, and a corsage of pink roses. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. H. Bishop. The bride's gift to the groom was a lovely fountain pen and the groom's gift to the bride was a lovely gold necklace. After the ceremony the happy young couple left for a honeymoon trip to Springhill, N.S., to visit the groom's relatives. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents for the bride party. For travelling the bride wore a light blue coat with navy accessories. After they returned home a wedding supper was held at the home of the bride's parents to a few intimate friends. Those assisting in serving was the bride's cousin, Miss Muriel Burns and the groom's sister, Mrs. George N. Reeves. The happy young couple will reside in Freetown.

DON TERRY, NEW FILM SERIAL HERO

If handsome, athletic Don Terry had continued with his original career, today's sports headlines might have read "Terry primed for heavyweight ring title fight."

Instead, the husky action star turned to moving pictures. His current role is that of young Commander Winslow in Universal's new 12-episode Chapter Play, "Don Winslow of the Navy" now showing at the Capitol Theater.

Terry, a graduate of Harvard where he had won the university's heavyweight boxing crown, planned to be a professional boxer until he was offered a movie opportunity. That opportunity turned out to be the lead role in "Me, Gangster."

He has been in pictures ever since. Seen with Terry in "Don Winslow of the Navy" are John Litel, Claire Dodd, Anne Nagel, Samuel S. Hinds, Walter Sande, Wade Boteler, Kurt Katch and a large supporting cast.

THRILL - FILM HAS ROMANEIC TWIST

Five million dollars worth of diamonds, crooks and international plotters, and a bride and groom who become innocently involved in a deadly mystery, form the thrilling and dramatic highlights of Universal's "Bombay Clipper" now on the bill at the Capitol Theater.

William Gargan and Irene Hervey are the newwedded innocents who step into the seething cauldron of intrigue, plot and counterplot when they sail on their honeymoon.

The setting is the interior of a huge Pacific-spanning clipper ship, winging its way from Bombay to San Francisco with its shady and dangerous cargo.

Included in the cast with Gargan and Miss Hervey are Charles Lane, Maria Montez, Mary Gordon, Lydd Corrigan and many other cinema favorites.

John Rawlins directed the exciting movie melodrama.

ELLIOTT - RITTER ROUT OUTLAWS IN NEW WESTERN!

When two popular western stars like Bill Elliott and Tex Ritter are co-starred in one picture, such as they are in Columbia's "King of Dodge City" at the Empire Theatre, it becomes a production problem as to just who will do what in the way of action.

In this case, Bill does nearly all of the fighting and Tex takes care of the singing.

Elliott has one terrific battle with three heavies—Pierce Lyden, Francis Walker and Jack Ingram—whom total weight goes well over 600 pounds. Then, he adds spice to the action by knocking Tex for a loop and winning the right to go after Guy Usher, the top heavy, for the final showdown.

Tex has plenty of gunplay himself, but his performance is stressed for comedy. A highlight in this respect is when he accuses a horse thief by the novel method of singing a song to him, then arrests him and throws him in jail.

Elliott portrays the usual role of Wild Bill Hickok and Ritter is the sheriff, who is trying to arrest him, chiefly to get him out of the way of the girl they are both interested in.

GREENVALE W. I.

The June meeting of Greenvale W. I. met at the home of Mrs. B. Wonnacott with ten members and six visitors present.

The present president and the meeting opened with the Institute Carol and Creed. The roll call was answered and the minutes were read and adopted. It was decided to give $10.00 to "Save the Children Fund." The Red Cross Committee report, Mrs. E. E. White is to purchase quilt bat.

Sick Committee reported having made one visit. All bills were paid. The correspondence consisted of receipt from Red Cross for donation of $10.00, letter from the Institute Supervisor and from Children's War Service Fund, also the P.E.I. Federation of Agriculturalists.

Mrs. MacPherson and Mrs. E. MacRae are appointed delegates to the district convention. It was decided to have a festival in the near future. Next meeting is to be held in the schoolroom on Thursday, July 9th.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem. A dainty lunch was served by the hostess.

Buy BEST FEAST

Best for Baking
Best for Health!

FRESH FROM MARITIME PLANT

EXTRA SPECIAL LARGE SIZE WINESAP EATING APPLES Doz. 39c Fresh Stock

Just Arrived Fresh Lot of SUNKIST ORANGES Large Size 43c Doz.

PEAS Tender and Sweet 2 tins 23c

CERTO For Your Jam To Make It Go Farther 25c Bottle

PERFECTION CREAMERY BUTTER FIRST GRADE 2 Lbs. 75c

SEEDLESS RAISINS 2 Lbs. 25c

Kellogs or Quaker CORN FLAKES 3 Pkg. 25c

BREAKFAST NO 1 BACON Machine Sliced 41c lb.

Phone 747 Free Delivery

HELP YOURSELF LOWER FOOD COSTS

Certo Crystals 2 Pkg. 25c

PEAS 2 Tins 25c

PEACHES, Choice Quality, 2 Tins 29c

FLUFFS 19c pkg. 25c pkg. 39c pkg. 2 Pkg 31c

MEATS

Roast Beef, Lb. — 22c
Spare Ribs, 3 lbs — 25c
Pigs Feet, 3 lbs. — 25c

DELICATED STEAK — 31c lb.

Sliced Cold Tongue — 45c lb.
Turkey Loaf — 49c lb.
Macaroni & Cheese — 35c lb.

CASH & CARRY STORES
187 GT. GEO ST.
(Pay Cash and Pay Less)

Phone 748 FREE DELIVERY

A HOME ON THE RANGE

By Bentley Ridge

CHAPTER VII

TELLFORTH'S INTENTIONS

Myrtle had seen the violets and the fruit trees bloom, the willows grow green in the harsh river bed. I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come down here?" said Mrs. Kane, that she was not so lucky as Rex? There's a pool higher up round the bend where John has caught dozens."

"I'll go and find it," said Myrtle. "Then I can tell him, if he wants to come down."

It was an excuse to be doing something and she rose. "I know the place," said Tellforth, unexpectedly. "Shall I show you?" He was on his feet before she could object, and they walked away together Myrtle remarked: "I have to admit that this is a very lovely country after all."

"Is it?" Tellforth smiled, as he stepped down on to the shingle. "I'm glad you think so. Of course, I know nothing about it."

"What do you mean, you know nothing about it?" You said once that you were attached to it—"

"Ah, yes, but one gets attached to any place in time. Whatever has happened to you in it, good or bad, doesn't you think so, Rosemary? They walked a short way along the shingle, and then climbed through a gully in the cliff to the paddocks above. Myrtle was thoughtful.

"Perhaps what you say is the reason why I sometimes look at this wonderful sunshine—and then I'm suddenly sick for the smell of a broken fog in London."

"Probably it is," understandingly.

"They were so intent on each other that they did not see the three persons on horseback coming down the wire fence, and Tellforth opened his eyes."

"However, I suppose you'll go to England sometime when you're married, won't you?" he said.

There was a subtle change in the look on his face, in the tone of his voice. The entry of something hard and ironical.

"I hope so," said Myrtle, of a sudden inwardly on guard.

They passed through, and Tellforth closed the gate, still unaware of the three riders, Rosemary, Evelyn, and another girl, who were drawing near and would soon be wanting to pass through it.

"Rex!" said Tellforth, as they turned to go on "is a very lucky man."

His tone was so conspicuously dry that Myrtle looked at him questioningly. What did he mean to imply—come