FOUND THE GERMANS DEPRESSED IN VICTORY.

LONDON, Aug. 11.— Professor Bernard Pares, who had been the British official eyewitness with the Russian armies, and is now back in London, summed up yesterday for The Daily Chronicle his impressions of the Eastern compaign.

"The war in Poland has revealed Russia at her best," he said. "When I left the Third army in Galicia at the end of June the Germans were fifty miles south of Lublin. They took a month to get there and that's not bad work for the Russians. When we retreated from Gorlice they took precious good care not to press us too much. On one occasion a Russian corps of 6,000 men hampered though they were by lack of adequate aritllery and munitions, actually took 7,000 prisoners, more than they themselves.

"Both Germans and Austrians are in a chronic condition of depression. It is hardly credible, but nevertheless true, that after their great successes in Galicia they somehow realized more than ever now in spite of any temporary advantage, the fact that they cannot win unless we choose to lose.

"I say deliberately and emphatically that on the whole of the Russian front, and I could go where I loked and talk to whom I liked, I have not seen or heard of anything brutal or breastly done by Russian troops. They have fought most humanely, in this war, almost too humanely, I sometimes think.

"Quite apart from the enthusiasm with which the Slay populations, Poles, Czechs, and Ruthenians, greeted their appearance on the Austrian soil, the remarkable fact must be recorded that a very large number of Austrian civilians quite voluntarily accompanied the Russians when the latter were forced to retire. Not only do they treat the wounded Germanor Austrian prisoner as well as their own people, they often actually treat them better. I had many personal illustrations of this and of the manner in which the sulkiness of the German attendants. Their Slav prisoners are treated with the greatest tolerance and often may be seen walking with perfect freedom in the streets.

"On the German side I was told no such amenities redeemed the ruin of war. Their troops were brutal, arrogant, and often drunk German prisoners, unlike Austrians, are sometimes found so hopelessly intoxicated they are not sober for twenty-four houre after their capture. On the other hand, I can say with certainty that there is not one case of drunkenness in the whole Russian army. The drink that Germans often deliberately leave, when they evacuate a town is promptly thrown into the gutters."

AN ANCIENT TEMPLE.

The unearthing of a great temple at Mephia, Egypt is announced by the University of Pennsylvania Museum. Dr. Clarence L. Fisher, Curator of the Egyptian section of the museum, was the leader of the Eckley B. Croxe, jun. expedition to Egypt, which made the discovery.

The temple, it is estimated, is of the period of Rameses II., and was erected about 5000 B. C. While no definite data can be given out at this time, the Egyptologists are inclined to believe that the temple is one that was built by Seti I., and the same one as decribed in Herodotus.

Memphis was the oldest and the greatest of the ancient Egyptian cities, and was noted for its art and architecture. Dr .Fisher reported he had collected more than 4.000 specimens of art and curios, which would be brought by the museum when he returns to this country.

PRINCESS FROCKS AGAIN.

Each year we hear the cry that the separate blouse is doomed to extinction, yet the decades pass without this ill prophecy proving true. While summer lasts it is possible that women will wear thin waists with skirts that carry coats, and it is earnestly hoped that the separate white washed blouse will never be banished from the wardrobe, for no garment can really take its place. But, accepting all these facts, still it must be faced as a condition, not a theory, that the one piece frock will be by far the more fashionable outfit than the three piece suit.

This autumn will see it at high tide. That is the news from across the water and there is no reason to doubt that all of the great designers are bending their efforts to secure originality in one-piece frocks that are frankly princess, or have the appearance of a skirt with a short jacket. The latter idea has been worked out rather successfully during the early summer, but the majority of women passed it by, choosing the regulation coat suit in preference, their reason being the traditional one that one can lift a coat and be cool in a transparent blouse, but the attached waist must remain. This is true when cloth is used for a coat and skirt, but the fashionable materials of this summer are not cloth, barring the thinnest kind of serge. And blue serge, they tell us, will retain its high position again during the autumn, which is good news for the most of us.

There does not pass a season that there is not some sort of a struggle when the frock comes to the part of the body which is supposed to mark a dividing line. Chefuit does not wan, the frock or coat, and Premet and Jenny seem to delight in placing the belt where it was in other days when women boasted of the smallness of their waists more than they did the largeness of their virtues.

SUMMER FANCY WORK.

It is a very simple matter to crochet or knit an edge to go across the bottom of a towel. When nicely done this adds much to the beauty of either a bath or face towel. It forms a convenient way of keeping individual towels separated, also. One woman was able to make a good income furnishing fine towels with pretty handknitted edgings. One handsome pattern is knit on needles and is made as follows: Cast on 14 stitches and knit the first row plain. Second row, slip one, throw thread over without knitting, narrow, over, knit, over, narrow, knit, over, knit two, over, narrow, knit,. Fourth row, slip, knit, over, narrow, over, knit, two, over and narrow four times, knit. Fifth row, slip, knit, over and narrow four times, knit three, over narrow knit. Sixth row, slip, knit, over narrow, over knit three, over and norrow four times, knit. Seventh row, slip, knit, over and narrow four times, knit four, over, narrow, knit. Eight row, slip, knit, over narrow, over, knit four, over and narrow four times, knit. Ninth row, slip, knit, over and narrow four times, knit five, over, narrow, knit. Tenth row, slip, knit,over, narrow, over, knit five, over and narrow four times, knit. Eleventh row, slip, knit, six over, narrow, knit. Twelfth row, slip, knit over narrow, over knit six, aver and narrow four times, knit. Thirteenth row, slip, knit, over and narrow four times, knit, seven, over, narrow, knit. Fourteen row, slip, knit, over, narrow, over, knit the remaining stitches plain. Fifteenth row, cast off seven stitches, knit, ten, over, narrow, knit, repeat from second row.

FOUR POINTS ABOUT MEAT

At least four points out to be well understood by the woman who spends the money for meat: How to select it wisely, how to cook it economically, and at the same time develop it sflavor; how to serve it attractively; how to utilize the various cuts to the best advantage. She cannot meet these requirements unless she understands the structure of meat, and something of its chemical composition and nutritive value, and the characteristics of good meat.

Let us consider then, the structure. The most obvious division of a piece of meat is into bone, fat, muscle and lean. It is the structure of this last division which is of peculiar interest to the woman selecting meat. This structure may be represented crudely by a bundle of straws such as are used at soda water fountains. This bundle of tubes in the case of meat is held together by a substance known as connective tissue, which on boiling, yields geletin. The tubes themselves are very minute, and of varying length. They are best shown in the "stringness' of overcooked meat, or can be shown rather easily by cutting corned beef "across the grain."

The fat of meat is distributed in the connective tissue which binds these bundles of fibre. The walls of these tubes are of a delicate elastic substance, andwithin these tubes are water, salts and extractives, the contents of the tubes making what is known as meat juice.

But stress is laid upon the structure at this point just because upon condition of these invisible tubes depends the explanation for these familiar terms, tough and tender, which describe the texture. Age and exercise strengthen both the walls of the tubes and the connective tissue. So, if a piece of meat is taken fom a part of the body of a mature animal that is much exercised, as the leg of a chicken, one would expect that to be less tender than the breast, because the legs have so much work to do. With this principle in mind one can understand why the meat lying along the backbone and known as the tenderloin is so named. One understands, too, why meat of the young animals as veal, will be softer and with less of the etxractives and juices which give characteristic flavor to different meats. Hence the statement, "calf-meat is half meat."

The question of the condition of the tubes according to the age of animals and position in the body give the reason for learning the location of the different cuts. The location of the cut and the age of the animal influence the character of the connective tissue, and of the bundles of fibres, and so determine the texture of the meat.—Woman's World.

TWO OF A KIND.

"I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to tell you, sir, that I am in love with your daughter," said the trembling suitor.

"Not at all, young man," replied her father. "And, furthermore, I've seen enough idiotic symptoms in the past months to convince me that your possion is reciprocated."

ON THE JOB.

The moving pictures of a train wreck were startlingly realistic.

"Who do you suppose that man is who is running with all his might towards the disaster," asked one auditor of a companion.

"I am not sure," replied the other, "but I'll bet a cookie it is a damage-suit lawyer."—Judge.
