Vegetable Marrow and Ginger Preserve

Peel one very large (or two medium) size vegetable marrow. Remove all seeds and stringy portion. Dice into 3-4 inch squares. Squeeze the juice of 6 lemons and cut the rinds into thin shreds. Add the lemons and 6 lbs. of granulated sugar, 2 ounces of ginger root, tied in a small bag, and 1-2 teaspoon cayenne pepper. Then add 2 cups of water, stir and mix well. Allow to stand 24 hours, until juice is covering mixture. Simmer until marrow is clear (about 1 1-2 to 2 hours.) Remove ginger bag when desired flavor is obtained. Bottle and seal into well sterilized jars while hot.

Morning Smile

Likee Jokee.

A guest at a banquet took pains to make himself agreeable to a Chinese sitting next to him.

Somewhat at a loss for small talk, he ventured, after the first course, to enquire, "Likee soupee?"

There was no reply except a genial beam. After the next course he followed up his first opening with "Likee fishee?" This evoked a still more genial beam.

Later in the evening the visitor from the Far East responded to a toast in perfect English.

On resuming his seat he asked his discomfited neighbor, "Likee speechee"

Wrong Answer.

"Pop, I got in trouble at school today and it's your fault."

"How's that, son?"

"Remember when I asked you how much a million dollars was?"

"Yes, I remember."

"Well, 'Helluva lot' isn't the right answer."

New Fall Fashions And Winter Styles

High necks — round necks —that is the important news for the fashion world this fall and winter. The yoke at the front of the waist has a sleek look and the fullness below is flatteringly soft. The slightly broadened shoulders and the long sleeves also give you that new look. The four piece circular skirt is a dressmaker's dream for all the grace and width is accomplished in the cutting. So simple and yet so effective. Needless to say, almost all dresses that flare at the bottom are very smart.

Splendid Cough Remedy Easily Mixed at Home

It's So Easy! Makes a Big Saving. No Cooking.

To get quick relief from a distressing cough, mix your own remedy at home. Once tried, you'll say it's your favorite cough medicine, and it's so simple and easy.

First, make a syrup by stirring 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until dissolved. A child could do it. No cooking needed.

Then get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. This is a compound containing Norway Pine and palatable guaiacol, in concentrated form, well known for its prompt action on throat membranes.

Put the Pinex into a 16-ounce bottle, and add your syrup. Thus you make 16 ounces of very efficient remedy, and you get four times as much cough medicine for your money. It tastes fine and never spoils.

And for quick, blessed relief, it is splendid. You can feel it penetrating the air passages in a way that means business. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and eases the soreness. Thus it makes breathing easy, and lets you get restful sleep.

Just try it, and if not pleased, your money will be refunded.

Which Rules — Head or Heart? Dorothy Dix Love or Career Vexes Girls

Woman Faces Crisis When She Has to Choose Between Taking a Husband or Following a Career for Which She Has Carefully Prepared Herself

One of the innumerable advantages of being a man is that he can eat his wedding cake and have it, too. He doesn't have to decide his career and marriage. He can have them both. After spending years of study and thousands of dollars in fitting himself for the profession he loves and for which he has a talent, he doesn't have to give it up just because he happens to fall in love with some girl.

There is nothing in domestic life that disqualifies him for being a good doctor or lawyer or carpenter. In fact, he is a better one and the more likely to succeed because he has the incentive of a family to work for, and the comforts of a home, and a wife to take care of him. Such, however, is not the happy lot of woman. She, poor soul, finds that careers and marriages do not mix any more than oil and water, and so when she falls in love she has to decide between her profession and her man. Furthermore, the problem grows more acute when, as often happens, the woman realizes that if she marries the man she loves she will be exchanging a brilliant future for a drab one filled with cooking and scrubbing and baby-tending.

One of these modern girls who is trying to make up her mind whether to espouse a $25-a-week man or a $5000-a year-job writes me:

"All my life I have wanted to be a career woman and have studied for years to perfect my training in the field of my choice. Now I am offered just the position I have looked forward to for so long, but the door of opportunity is shut to me if before, or during, the time I fill this place I get married.

"My fiance has a mediocre job that pays very little and offers scent hope in the way of promotion. He is not of the go-getter type and if I marry him all I can look forward to will be a life of poverty and struggle. Always I have wanted the nice things of life and now, when they are almost within my grasp, they will be taken away unless I sacrifice my love for them.

"Yet I love my fiance very much and I realize that as I am in my late twenties that he may be the last chance I will have for a husband, and that if I pass him up for the job I may regret it for the remainder of my life."

So what is a poor girl to do when which ever choice she makes she is pretty sure to wish that she had taken the other? If she gives up love for a career, there will be times when the taste of success will be bitter in her mouth and she will think how sweet would be the kisses of a husband upon her lips. There will be times when she will be lonely, or when she will long to feel the head of a baby on her breast and think that the sweetest music in the world is the patter of little feet and childish voices calling for M-o-t-h-e-r.

No matter what else life gives a woman, it does not compensate her for the lack of love, for not having a husband, a home and children. But if you choose love and poverty instead of the career, there will be plenty of times when she will regret the bargain she made. Times when, worn and weary, she will think enviously of the luxuries she might have had. Times when, shabby, she will dream of the pretty clothes and the brilliant entertainments in which she might have participated. Times when shabby, she will dream of the pretty clothes and the brilliant entertainments in which she might have participated. Times when it will seem to her that money and success are the only things in the world worth having.

So what is a poor girl to do, torn between ambition and love? Nobody can tell her. She must decide which rules her, her heart or her head.

Proper Use of Grammar is Essential

Dear Dorothy Dix—I am in love with a man who has every good quality and is everything that a girl could want in a husband, except that he has little education and uses the most atrocious English. I am utterly ashamed and humiliated at the way he talks and do not want him to meet any of my friends. He is conscious of his lack of education, but does not seem to be aware of the importance of good speech in society and business. Is there anything I can do about it? I love him and don't want to give him up because he is so fine, but how can I go through life listening to him murder the King's English.

PERPLEXED GIRL.

Answer:

The only thing you can do is to have a very plain talk with the young man. Tell him not only how you but also other people feel about his not being able to speak correctly. Try to make him understand what a handicap this is to him, not only in society, but in business.

Perhaps this will hurt his self-love so much that you will lose him, because men are very sensitive to criticism, and especially they can't stand it from the women they love. Every man wants to think that his sweetheart or his wife regards him as a little tin god, and it cuts him to the quick for her to point out even his slightest defect to him. Which is a pity, because so often a wife has had better social and educational advantages than a husband and she could help him so much if he would let her. If your friend takes this position and leaves you for some girl who doesn't care what sort of grammar he uses if he only pops the question, you need not regret it because a marriage with a man you are ashamed of would be unspeakable torture to you and would end in divorce. Love can stand anything but knowing its object is ridiculous and that other people jeer at it.

If, on the other hand, your friend has enough intelligence and ambition to wish to improve himself, there are many ways in which he can do it. The best and quickest way would be to hire some good teacher to spend a couple of hours with him every evening correcting his faults and pronunciation and grammar. But if he cannot do this, he can teach himself by the simple expedient of studying the dictionary. And you can help him by pointing out his mistakes to him.

The Girl of 16 and Marriage

Dear Miss Dix—Don't you think the reason that girls of 16 make so many mistakes in marriage is because they lack judgment themselves and will not consult their elders in picking out their mates? N. H. B.

Answer:

Sure girls of 16 lack enough knowledge of life to pick out their husbands, but I doubt if their elders could help them make wiser selections because Mama's and Papa's taste might not always coincide with the girls'.

will, sir," Dollimore pursued. "The head woman's secretary is quite sure that a will was drawn up a short time ago by Rolliter. He said there was no will in existence. Later, when he suspected that we had heard about the will, he said that the will had been destroyed by the deceased. Thus the son in Paris will inherit the whole estate. I think Rolliter was lying about the will, and Supt. Ducros concurs."

"It would be a pretty little plot," the Chief admitted thoughtfully.

"Moreover," Dollimore went on, "when I asked for Fernandez' passport I noticed another in the drawer he took it from. And the name on it was Cardew."

"Did you seize it?"

"No. Nor did I let Fernandez know that I had noticed it." I thought it advisable, for the moment, not to let him know that we associated him with Cardew."

"That's very interesting about the passport. I wonder what passport Cardew is using? He must have one," the Chief said thoughtfully.

"Not necessarily, sir, with respect. He is a British subject and is apparently in England."

The Chief nodded.

"What do you think of the Inspector's idea, Ducros?"

"I think it extremely ingenious. Much of it is theory, but the few facts that we know are not at variance with it. It's rather like a jigsaw puzzle, but some of the bits do fit in."

The Chief sat back in his chair and lit his pipe slowly and thoughtfully.

"I didn't like the tone of the papers this evening," he said at length. "They've got hold of the fact that our young friend Dollimore is the graduate of an ancient university and actually possesses a dress-suit, and are inclined to be funny about it. Did you upset the journalists?"

"I tried not to. The inspector, I'm afraid, didn't treat them with quite the respect to which they are accustomed."

For a while the Chief pulled his briar in silence.

"I think you had better go back, Superintendent. Stay at an hotel in the town. Take Detective Sergeant Wilkes with you and thoroughly examine the servants. The last thing I want them to suspect is that we regard the affair as other than a simple robbery with murder superimposed. Get a list of the servants whom she would have recognized if she came upon them in her room and so on. Get me?"

Ducros nodded . . . and waited.

"And I think that you, Dollimore, might have a roving commission for a day or so. Is this man Rolliter, for example, a London solicitor?"

"Yes."

"Look him up. Find out all you can about him—we may even have a record here. If Cardew turns up in Mossford—as he may—snaffle him at once, Ducros. I'll provide you with a variety of charges."

"Very good, sir."

"Turn up there to-morrow morning with a couple of local constables and make rather a splash about it."

"I get you, sir."

"I think, on the whole, you've done as well as could be expected and are on the right lines. The whole business is right up Flash Cardew's street."

"Thank you, sir," said Ducros rising.

"Good luck, Inspector," the Chief added with a smile.

"We're well out of that," Ducros said when they were once more in his office.

"I'm afraid you've got the dirty end of the stick."

Etiquette Paves Way to Social Success

Don't Let Slips Betray You!

Eyebrows go up, new acquaintances wonder! For the hostess drags a woman guest across the room to introduce her to a man—hails him with an ill-mannered "Meet Mrs. Smith!"

Etiquette says the man should always be taken to the woman to be presented.

And well-bred people avoid such phrases as "shake hands with," or "meet," or "I want you to know." It's always safe, gracious and correct to say simply, "Mrs. Smith, this is Mr. Jones."

So easily you can learn etiquette for every occasion, be charmingly poised.

Puzzled about when to rise? A girl stands when she meets a much older man or woman, or a very important one. A man always rises when he is introduced. He also stands when a woman enters the room, waits until she is seated before he takes his seat again.

Do you know how to reply to a formal invitation? How to be host at a small theatre party?

Be sure of such matters, develop new poise. Our 32-page booklet gives etiquette for theatre, country club, hotels, for entertaining, visiting, other important social occasions. Discusses invitations, telephone etiquette.

CHAPTER V

REPORTING AT "THE YARD"

Mossford is less than an hour's run from New Scotland Yard with a fast car and a competent driver.

"Thirty nine limit," Ducros growled. It was the first time he had spoken for some time.

Dollimore grinned and lessened the pressure of his foot on the accelerator. "Sorry!" he said.

"It would be a fitting finish to a brilliant week-end if we were run in for exceeding the speed limit," Ducros said bitterly.

"We could explain that we were detectives," his youthful colleague retorted.

"I doubt it," Ducros said grimly.

"Do you mean to let me put my point of view to the Chief?" Dollimore asked some time later.

"I'm going to insist on it, my lad. My own story is one of unqualified negation."

"Yes. But will you do your best to make him see the case as I do?"

"I don't think you will need a great deal of help, Dolly. You can do the talk part a lot better than I ever could." "Apart from my belief that it's the work of a dangerous gang which includes Flash Cardew, we haven't got far. Nothing else will excuse our not having carried out a routine search of the servants' rooms for one thing, in spite of the fact that we could account for every one of them."

"They've got the photos and the finger-prints," Ducros said with increasing bitterness.

"Look here, chief, you're letting this get you down. Hang it all, you can't manufacture clues and you can't arrest people on suspicion. Anyway, here we are. Now for it."

From his office, Ducros 'phoned to the Chief. Dollimore watched him and listened rather grimly to the part of the conversation he could hear.

"Come on," he said as he replaced the receiver. "He seemed very surprised that we were here at all."

"You open the ball," Dollimore said. "If he flies off the handle I'll come in at once."

"Didn't expect you, two back as soon as this," the Chief said. "What's the news?"

"Broadly speaking, sir, there isn't any," Ducros said. "I take it you are acquainted with my telephone report and have seen the evening papers?"

"Yes. I learnt more from the papers."

"We were there, of course, when it actually happened. There isn't the shadow of a clue."

"But, good gracious, you don't mean that you've quietly walked out on the case an hour or so after it occurred? You haven't even got the reports from the Fingerprint Department."

"No. But I know what they will be—the prints of the people who would be in that room in the normal course. The people who actually did it are not the sort to leave fingerprints."

The Chief nodded: "I thought of Flash Cardew at once," he said.

"He's been there recently," Ducros said tactfully. "A young fellow—a sort of dance-partner, but a very decent chap—recognized the picture we had of him. He was there with the man Fernandez, who runs the place, and a solicitor called Rolliter.

"What was missing?"

"A few rings—fairly valuable, but not the stuff people of their kind commit murder for."

"No one commits murder if they can help it. Almost always the immediate cause is fear," the Chief said.

"Dollimore and I came to the conclusion that we could do very little else at that end. We've got to find Cardew, and he isn't there. Dollimore has worked out a theory—that's all it is—which you may care to hear."

"Let's hear it, Inspector."

"The deceased had a son in Paris, sir. A waster and a wash-out. She made him an allowance so long as he kept out of England. She was exceedingly wealthy. He stands, of course to gain by her death. Rolliter, the solicitor, is in touch with him—has paid him the allowance, and so on. I examined the passports of Fernandez and a woman called Sadie Pechmann. They have both been to Paris recently."

"So have I," the Chief put in.

By one great heart the universe is stirred;
By its strong pulse, stars climb the darkening blue;
It throbs in each fresh sunset's chaning hue,
And thrills through the low sweet song of every bird.
By it the plunging blood reds all men's veins;
Joy feels that heart against his rapturous own
And on it, Sorrow breathes her deepest groan;
It bounds through gladness and deepest pains.
Passionless beating through all Time and Space,
Relentless, calm, majestic on its march,
Alike, though Nature shake heaven's endless arch,
Or man's heart break, because of some dead face!

In children's smiling as in mother's tears,
And, for strange comfort, through the aching years,
Men's hungry souls have called that great Heart, God!

The Quick Way

The speediest way to put a recipe together is to read it carefully first then get out everything needed in the recipe. Then get to work and do as directed. You waste no time washing your hands in between in getting the articles out of a clean cupboard or cabinet.

Poorly Ironed Clothes

Do not dampen the clothes so wet that it is difficult to iron them absolutely dry. If clothes are not ironed absolutely dry it results in easily creased garments that look unsightly after one wearing.

Rouged Knees

Coupled with prediction that women's skirts will go higher, fashion in Paris, France, announces that it is now fashionable for women to show rouged knees.

Bottles containing flavorings and extracts should be kept tightly corked or they will lose their strength and flavor.

TIPS FOR JAM-MAKERS

When you tie down jam-pot covers wet the string before putin it round the jar. The string can be more easily tied, and when dry, shrinks and makes the jar more air-tight.

Never use jars that have contained any kind of fat or grease, for then the jam will not keep, no matter how well the jars are washed out.

If jam is found to have gone sugary, put it into the oven and let the sugar melt—the jam will then be quite fit for use.

If you dip parchment jam covers in milk before covering your jam, the jam will not go mouldy so easily, and when pouring the jam into your jars remember to stand the jars on a wet cloth, and there will be no danger of them cracking.

SILVER TANKS FOR FLOWERS

London,—Square vases of sparkling silver, shaped like the glass tanks, are the latest containers for flowers. Almost any herbaceous border flowers which have fairly long stems are suitable for these tanks.

Sometimes the silver is engraved in a bold design, a favorite one being swimming fishes. These tanks look better when filling up corners than as table decorations. On a dinner table they rather obscure the guests opposite.

For table use the new shallow silver bowls are most attractive. These are barely two inches deep and look best filled with tiny flowers which have been broken off just below the blossom. Mignonette and forget-me-nots packed tightly with here and there tiny moss rose buds and oldfashioned single pinks look particularly well.

To give an atmosphere of coolness on a hot day, silver urns filled with green leaves and ferns are effective.

By the way, what do you do with your old table napkins? We discovered a friend of ours throwing hers away the other day and told her she was foolish. If you sew a loop of tape or a curtain ring to one corner and hang it by the sink, you have a new and excellent glass cloth!
