NEW CREAMERY

Behind the Lines in France, March 19.—The following vivid story of the battle of Neuve Chapelle is told by an officer who was wounded in the fighting. "Modern warfare is such an infernal business that any man who is not liked ought to be cheerful. It all seems like a wild dream to me. I never heard such a row in all my life. And the bullets and the shells—it was like passing through the most awful hail storm. My battalion had been in their rest billets for some days when an army order came round saying that we were to attack the enemy's lines at dawn, and that a great effort was going to be made to break through. How did we feel about it? Well, I don't know how others felt, but the mere idea of attacking sent cold shivers down my spine—and I don't think any other spies were much firmer than mine. "We were moved down to a little village close to our front. Here we were placed in trenches and were told that a division would attack Neuve Chapelle and that our division was to cooperate and advance on Aubers as soon as Neuve Chapelle was captured. We were in our trenches at dawn when suddenly a most infernal din commenced. "The End of the World" "You never saw such a sight, you never heard such a noise. I heard one of my men say, 'Bill, this is the end of the world, and I did not blame him for thinking so. We could see in the distance great masses of flame, earth and brick in great clouds of smoke, all ascending together, enormous shells screamed over our heads and burst among the German bombardment the fire ceased as suddenly as it had begun. "At that time we were awaiting the order to advance towards Aubers. The German artillery, although greatly outnumbered by our guns, began to get busy shelling all our front. Our two battalions jumped from the entrenchments and rushed forward in long waves, speedily disappearing amid the smoke. It seemed very pleasant to lie covered in trenches after what we saw taking place in front of us. Infernal Shell Fire "At length we jumped out into the open. I went along as best I could, as I was in charge of the machine guns. To me the air seemed alive with bullets and shells. There was a buzzing noise, such as you hear in a tropical forest on a hot summer day. On we moved, until we came to an open stretch, which was being swept by an infernal shell fire. We crossed this in rushes to gain the shelter of a few houses, losing some 40 or 50 men. There we remained for some little time, reforming the battalion and awaiting further orders. When these came we moved forward over rough, open ground, coming upon lots of our poor fellows lying dead. They were from the only battalion which had preceded us. "Then we entered the German trenches which had been captured. Again we halted. All this time our shells, German shells and rifle and machine gun bullets were shrieking overhead. "Thank goodness, in an action like this you seem to lose your senses. A kind of elevation above all ordinary feelings comes over you and you feel as though you were rushing through air. There is so much to frighten you that you cease to be afraid. Then your senses gradually come back. That is why all infantry attacks should be carried through with one overwhelming rush. "Soon I saw about sixty of the Regiment strolling back down the road. We asked them where they were going. One man replied: "We have stormed every trench and every bloomin' village in this mucky country. All our officers are shot to we thought it about time someone else had a go."

ZEPPELIN RAID ON PARIS COMPLETE FAILURE SAYS OFFICIAL REPORT

PARIS, March 21.—Zeppelin airships raided Paris early this morning and dropped a dozen bombs, but the damage done was unimportant. Seven or eight persons were injured, but only one seriously. Four of the aircraft started for the capital following the valley of the Oise, but only two reached their goal. Missiles also were dropped at Compiègne, Ribecourt and Dreslincourt, but without serious result. Paris remained calm while the aerial invasion was in progress and rose to attack the Germans, but curiosity than fear as to the result. Trumpets gave the signal that all lights must be extinguished as soon as warning was received of the Zeppelin's approach. Searchlights were turned upon the clouds, anti-aircraft guns opened fire and aeroplanes rose to attack the Zeppelins, but the operations were hampered by a heavy mist. An official communication regarding the raid declares it served only to show how well the defensive arrangements would work out when put to the test. The statement follows: Between 1.15 and 3 o'clock this morning four Zeppelins started toward Paris from the direction of Compiègne, following the valley of the Oise. Two were compelled to return before reaching Paris, one at Ecouen (ten miles north of Paris), the other at Mantz, (on the Seine, thirty-six miles from Paris). "The other two were attacked by air craft guns and only passed over outlying districts of the northwestern part of Paris and neighboring suburbs. They withdrew after having dropped a dozen bombs, some of which did not explode. The damage was unimportant. Seven or eight persons were injured but only one seriously. "The lights of the city flickered and then disappeared as the city firemen hastened through the streets blowing on trumpets the notes which it had been announced would signal the approach of hostile aircraft. Buzzing motors of the aeroplane guards, which were the first to be seen, and searchlights flashing from the vicinity of the Eiffel Tower to the heights of Montmarie, caused the keenest interest and excitement among the population of the awakened city, but there was no panic. Thousands strained their eyes in an effort to catch a glimpse of the invaders which many claimed, to have been moving swiftly in the vicinity of Madeline, or to watch the work of French airmen. Balconies and the roofs of houses in Passy and other quarters were used as vantage points by the curious, while many of the more timid sought refuge in cellars or other places of safety, where they remained until sure all danger was past.

HERE'S A WAY TO SAVE DOCTOR BILLS.

Physicians Give Free Advice by Which Parents May Profit. It's a matter of general interest just now how one's physical condition can be got into shape to best receive the benefits of the summer season. Especially is this true of the children. They have become run down by a winter of unnatural manner of living because of ill-considered food and much time spent indoors. Spring comes with its sunshine, its fresh vegetables and all else invigorating, but the children are in no condition to receive nature's remedies. Many parents call in the family physician. Many other parents take advantage of what the physician told them when he was first called in consultation. All good family physicians say: "Give the children Castoria." Healthy parents know this remedy of old, for they took it themselves as children. It was more than thirty years ago that Castoria made a place for itself in the household. It bore the signature of Charles H. Fletcher, then as it does today, which is accepted in thousands of homes where there are children. Much is printed nowadays about big families. Dr. William J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., is the father of one of these much-read-about families. Here is what he says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have, in my years of practice, found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home." Charles H. Fletcher has received hundreds of letters from prominent physicians who have the same esteem for Castoria that Dr. McCrann has. Not only these physicians say they use Castoria in their own families, but they prescribe it for their patients. First of all it is a vegetable preparation which assimilates the food and regulates the stomach and bowels. After eating comes sleeping, and Castoria looks out for that too. It allays feverishness and prevents loss of sleep, and this absolutely without the use of opium, morphine or other baneful narcotic. Medical journals are reluctant to discuss proprietary medicines. Hall's Journal of Health, however, says: "Our duty is to expose danger and record the means for advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health by regulating the system, not by stupefying it, and our readers are entitled to the information."
