Dorothy Dix Says

(Continued from Page 3) to be full of doubts and fears, but the man and woman who are really mated rest in perfect peace in their trust and faith in each other. DEAR MISS DIX: Do you believe a man of 30 has any chance of curbing a bad temper? I have a friend who has every fine quality except that he has a violent temper. If any one crosses him he goes into rages and says and does the most terrible things. He is engaged to a sweet and gentle girl whom I fear he will make very unhappy. Is there any way he can be warned? ANSWER: I have never known any one who had a high temper who ever learned to control it. The guilty seem proud of it and think that it shows they are high-spirited. They seem to think that everybody should forgive their insults and be ready to kiss and make up as soon as they are in a good humor. A girl had better marry a drunkard or a gambler or a roue than a man with a high temper. She would have more chance of happiness. DOROTHY DIX.
