NOTED DUTCH ACTRESS KEEPS POPULARITY

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 25.—Holland's veteran actresses, Theodora Mann Bouwmeester, who is 76 years old, has retired from the stage, but she still retains her popularity.

Had Hard Schooling

Theo' Mann Bouwmeester had theatrical blood in her veins. Her grandfather, Frederick A. Rosenveidt, lived to celebrate his diamond jubilee as a leading actor, and her father, a well-known actor, manager of his time, celebrated his golden jubilee.

Thinks Old Styles Best

Theo's performances lay with the grand dramatic art. Her favorite part was that of Marguerite Gauthier in Dumas' 'Lady of the Camellias.' The French drama as presented by Dumas, Sardou, Palleron and others of their time, attracted her powerfully, but she did not neglect the native Dutch drama and also appeared in roles of Ibsen's heroines.

Real Life Supplies Movie Extra Types

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The policeman, football player or sailor in modern movies frequently is the real thing. The public's demand for realism is primarily responsible for actual types supplanting professional extras.

Sources Are Indexed

Fred Clark, chief of the Paramount casting office on Long Island, was asked to furnish six Hindu for an East Indian scene. The filling cases were filled with names of extras, assorted according to nationality, but there was no Hindu.

Nations Of Europe Still Fear Spies

Since nations are very much as they were before the war at heart and since most of them believe that war is by no means ended, but on the other hand, will certainly break out again, it is perhaps natural that they should continue at their old tricks of espionage.

Is Your Child Handicapped?

Unknown to their parents millions of children have imperfect vision and are persistently handicapped in school and play. You can be sure your child is not thus handicapped only through an eye-sight examination.

Working For Britain

So keenly were the British authorities concerned that, according to the French theory, they planted a nest of spies in Paris for the special purpose of finding out some secret. A French girl named Marthe Moreuil, confessed that she had been spying out naval and Paris radio business of Williames in the interests of the Italian Fischer, a naturalized British sub-Government.
