[By J. L. M.]

—On the picturesque shore of Northumberland Strait, in the district of Bonaventure, stands the Sea Cow Head Lighthouse, so named because the skeleton of a sea cow or walrus was found on the nearby rocks. Two miles north are the dangerous Miscouche shoals upon which several ships had been wrecked and the government, in order to protect the shipping, decided it was necessary to erect this lighthouse. In 1863 engineers were sent to select a suitable location. As that part of the country was densely wooded these men peeled the bark off several trees to the very top, at the edge of the bank, so that the officials, when they arrived in a ship, could easily see the place. The land was then cleared—the farmers of the neighborhood assisting with the work, and in 1864 construction was under way. The contractor was John Rankin, St. John, N. B. As the bents were of one length and the building seventy feet high and eight-sided, it was a difficult task. The timbers, heavy by hand, were twelve inches by twelve inches and four inches by twelve inches, well braced with iron inside and out. Its entrance door was on the east side.

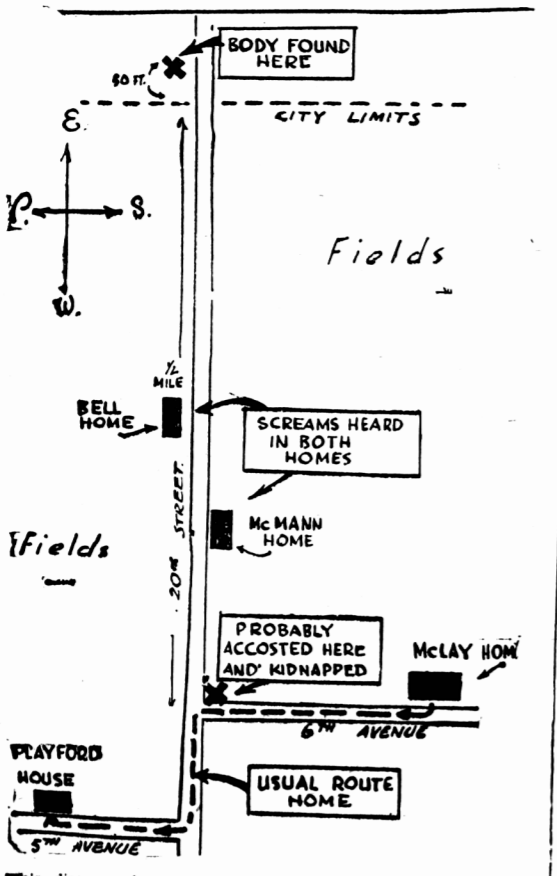

The first caretaker was Malcolm MacFarlane. For two years he was obliged to use the old fish oil in the lamp which had to be trimmed every two hours. William MacCallum, his assistant, attached to an alarm clock a device which would pull the bed clothes off when the alarm sounded thus awakening him to attend the light. Thomas Huesis, the next keeper, was followed by James Wright. Succeeding him was Peter Ranahan who held the position for forty-five years before being superannuated. In 1879 a residence was built for the cotidian and his family, who had previously lived on the second and third floors of the lighthouse. Thomas Ranahan, the former caretaker's son, who was born in this building and grew up there, was the next in charge. He held the appointment for twenty-eight years, until October 31, 1946, when he was pensioned. He was succeeded by Walter Richards, the present keeper.

The early one lamp method was replaced by six large reflectors with a lamp to each, then in 1901, a flash-light system, imported from France, was installed. It worked on a clock like plan, run by weights, which had to be wound twice during the short nights and three times during the long winter nights. Seafaring men distinguished it by two flashes, a space and another flash.

A continuous service was begun in 1916 when the ferry was established between Cape Tormentine and Port Borden—prior to that the beacon was used in the summer months only. During the last World War this light was kept revolving steadily and was used as a landmark for planes. Because of the faithful performance of duty by the caretakers, many tragedies have been averted.

CARR-HYDE NUPTIALS

Cornwall United Church was the scene of a very informal but pretty wedding at ten-thirty a.m. Wednesday, Sept. 23rd, when Rev. M. K. Charman united in marriage Mildred Elizabeth, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hyde, Cornwall, and Robert Milton Carr of Brookfield, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Carr, Oyster Bed Bridge.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, looked very charming in a street-length dress of aqua crepe with pink feather hat and black accessories, and carried a hand bouquet of pink carnations. She wore the groom's gift, a strand of pearls.

Miss Florence Matheson, friend of the bride, made an attractive bridesmaid in a street-length dress of turquoise crepe with black accessories. Her feather hat and hand bouquet of roses were in American Beauty shade.

Mr. Eric Carr, cousin of the groom, acted as best man.

The bride's mother wore a dress of printed silk with grey and black accessories, while the groom's mother chose a dress of rose crepe with black accessories. Roses and snapdragons composed their corsages.

Miss Suzanne Brenton of Charlottetown played the nuptial music, rendering beautifully "O Perfect Love" during the signing of the register.

Following the impressive ceremony the wedding party motored to the Queen Hotel, Charlottetown, where a dainty breakfast was served to the immediate relatives. The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. Mr. Charman and responded to by the groom. The bride's table was beautifully decorated with vases of cut flowers, and centered with a three-tiered wedding cake, topped by a miniature bride and groom.

Immediately afterwards the happy couple left by motor for a honeymoon in the Maritime Provinces. For travelling, the bride wore a smart beige suit, with brown hat and accessories. On their return they will take up residence in Brookfield, where the groom has purchased a farm, following his return from serving five years in His Majesty's Forces, on the Italian and Northwest European fronts.

Previous to her marriage, the bride was pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. Fred Younker, North River Road, when Mrs. Younker and Miss Florence Matheson were joint hostesses at a bonnie fry and kitchen shower. She also received a generous gift from her fellow-employees at Moore and McLeod, Ltd.

A miscellaneous shower was held at the home of the bride's parents, where a large number of friends from Cornwall and surrounding districts gathered to present her with many lovely gifts. On the same occasion, the bride was the recipient of a beautiful white Bible from the members of Cornwall United Church Choir where she had been organist for a number of years.

Numerous friends wish this young couple many years of happy wedded life.

MOVIES HELP POLO RESEARCH

A moving and helpful film has just been completed in Britain. Sponsored by the Ministry of Health, it's destined to aid research on poliomyelitis. It was made and distributed within two weeks, and is now being shown to doctors all over Britain. It points out how to detect the first symptoms of infantile paralysis, and how to tackle them.

Stars of this sad movie are the children who were the victims of this summer's unusually high polo outbreak in Britain. The film was made in London hospitals, and the commentary is by one of Britain's greatest experts on polo.

These four children were made motherless Saturday when Mrs. Ernest Benoit of Wallaceburg, Ont., drowned in the St. Clair river near Sarnia. Mrs. Benoit was sitting in a car on a ferry when her husband caused the car to run off the ferry by cranking the engine while it was in gear.
