ARCHDEACON MEETS TRAGIC DEATH

THE FREIGHT RATES

The Guardian is asked to publish the following, which, coming from an authoritative source, is doubtless correct. In the Guardian's article on "The Three Short Hauls," which elicited this comment expression was given to an opinion that for some reason has become quite general even among well informed business men:

In an article on "The Three Short Hauls" in Tuesday's "Guardian" the emphatic but erroneous statement is made that "it costs more to carry freight on the P. E. I. R. than it does an equal distance elsewhere" and this statement is reiterated in another form of the same article, on the authority of some person whose information is not reliable, that it costs more for transportation of freight for a distance of fifty miles on the P. E. I. R. than on fifty miles of the intercolonial. Both these statements are without any foundation in fact. So far as the writer's knowledge extends, there is no Railway in operation in the Dominion of Canada, on which the charge for the carriage of local freight for short hauls is less than for equal distances on the Prince Edward Island Railway. This being the case, the structure built on a foundation poorly supported falls to the ground. With regard to the case cited, wherein it is alleged that an exorbitant charge was recently made for the transportation of two horses from Georgetown to Charlottetown, it may be explained that, at the request of the owner of the horses in question, the animals were carried on the Special Mail Express Train. If he had been content to have waited for the regular freight train coming forward on the following day, the freight charges would have been less; but it appears that while some people are anxious to be the recipient of special favors, they are not willing that such should be bestowed except without expense to themselves.
