Is Youth Right to Put Off Marriage Until He Can Support Wife in Luxury?—Worker is Entitled to Her Wage, Even When She's a Daughter

Dear Miss Dix—I am engaged to a splendid young man, but he will not marry me, although I have been waiting for him for several years, because he does not think he is making enough to give me the things I should have.

Answer: You are right. A certain amount of money just enough to assure bread and cheese to go along with the kisses, is necessary to make marriage a success, but with that assured any young couple of lovers are justified in taking their courage in both hands and starting out on the great adventure together.

For happiness in marriage is one of the things that is not for sale over the counter. It does not depend upon possessions. It is not assured by the bridegroom being able to present his bride with strings of matched pearls and taking her to live in a palace and being able to shower her with limousines and Paris finery and give her servants to wait upon her.

Quite the contrary. Statistics show that there are more divorces among the rich than among the poor. It is a matter of common observation that when you find an elderly millionaire and his original wife still living together in mutual love and happiness it is because the tie between them was forged on the anvil of poverty by hard knocks in the days when they hadn't a thin dime between them.

And the reason for this is obvious. Money separates a married couple. Poverty draws them together. The rich man and his wife are not necessary to each other. The poor man and his wife are. They must depend upon each other for their society, for their amusements, for their comfort and well-being.

Of course, it is fine and admirable for a man who is in love with a woman to want to give her every luxury and make her life soft and easy, but when he denies her a wedding ring until he can afford a platinum one set with diamonds he is literally giving her a stone when she asks for bread.

Anyway, a man's idea that he shows his love for a woman by wrapping her in pink chiffons and having her do nothing but sit on a silk cushion and sew up a seam and feed upon strawberries, sugar and cream, is all nonsense. A real woman doesn't want that sort of a one-sided partnership in marriage.

Thousands of young couples who have only a few dollars and love to marry and live happily ever afterward. They set up housekeeping in a two-by-four flat with furniture they make with their own hands. The man toils without the home and the woman in it, but they hope and plan and dream together and often go up to fame and fortune.

Dear Dorothy Dix—I am one of three girls, all employed and making good salaries. We are the support of our mother. I personally have been working for fifteen years, during which time I have handed over my pay envelope to my mother without opening it and have only received a small allowance out of it.

Nothing Better AT ANY PRICE

'Vaseline' Petroleum Jelly is the last word in purity—that's why it is recommended by doctors the world over. It's a standard first aid remedy for cuts, burns, scalds and bruises; for the treatment of colds, fever blisters, dry nostrils, windburn, and dozens of other things. Keeps baby free from chafing. Absolutely pure, safe.

If you don't see it you are not getting the genuine product of Chesebrough Mfg. Co., Con's'd., 5520 Chabot Avenue, Montreal.

Beggar—Kind sir, I have a wife an' ten children, and—(thanks for the coin, sir)—and I haven't got eyes on 'em for ten years. To, ta!

In your own hands, as she has no way of getting hold of your money unless you give it to her.

Of course, it is your duty to help support your mother, and you and your sisters should agree upon what is a fair amount and give it to her, but you are foolish to turn over your entire earnings to her and just have the pittance she chooses to give you.

Mothers take a queer attitude toward their daughters' earnings. Nearly always they seem to think that all the money their daughters make belongs to them by rights. It is a common thing for a mother to demand her daughter's pay envelope, but I have never heard of a case in which a mother expected her son to hand over his pay envelope.

The worker is entitled to her wage. Even if it is necessary to spend every cent of it on the support of the family, handle your own money and, at least, have the satisfaction of giving it yourself. The purse bearer has always held a position of honor and esteem.

Dear Miss Dix—I am very much in love with a young man who says that although he loves me he has no intention of ever marrying me. He says he does not like the thought of being married. Shall I give him up or not? Do you suppose he will change after he gets older?

Answer: The young man is not in love with you or the thought of marriage would not be repulsive to him. On the contrary, he would be eager to enter the blessed estate and would be trying to sell you the idea of how just big enough for two.

So, in my opinion, you are wasting your time on this gentleman who has warned you that his attentions are without intentions. Your best play is to gently but firmly wait him into the outer air and tell him that you have no time to waste on him further, and for him not to come around again unless he brings a wedding ring in his pocket.

If he really cares for you that will bring him to the proposing point. But don't forget that there are men who are born bachelors, who really can't stand the thought of being tied down by marriage, and these get more set against it the older they get.

FOR THE WOMAN READER

THE HOUSEWIFE A laugh is just like music, It freshens all the day; It tips the peaks of life with light And drives the clouds away; The soul grows glad that hears it, And feels its courage strong— A laugh is just like sunshine For cheering folks along.

ZESTFUL FIRST COURSE WHEATS THE APETITE

With the summer heat taking away one's desire for food, it becomes necessary to serve a zestful first course which will whet the appetite.

Ice cold bouillon of jelly-like consistency is welcome on a hot day. Fruit in the form of a cocktail, soup or appetizer is also popular for summer meals. Chilled fish cocktails, vegetable appetizers and vegetable juice cocktails all make inviting beginnings for hot weather menus.

Not Too Stiff

If it's possible to serve a cold concoction in a well of ice, so much the better. But if this form of service is not convenient, keep the food on ice until ready to serve and always chill the service container before filling it with the mixture.

Jellied consommé is delicious for hot noons or evenings. Highly seasoned, it stimulates the appetite much as hot soup does.

Jellied tomato bouillon is appealing with its tart piquancy. It should be quivering firm, but not stiff enough to shape. A too-stiff jelly is unappetizing.

Cold waters are a good accompaniment for any jellied soup. And radishes and celery may be served with anything but a mixed vegetable soup.

Canned soups, bouillon cubes or freshly made stock may be used for jellied soups. Instead of long cooking and fussing over meat bones trying to extract the gelatine, try using gelatine, with canned soup or bouillon cubes. This makes a delicious jellied soup which is very easy to prepare.

Extra Spice Needed Extra salt and pepper are needed for food bouillon, since very cold foods have a tendency to dull the taste.

Fruit, also, is refreshing and zestful served in one of its many forms. In making a fruit cocktail be sure to cut fruit neatly in small pieces. Crushed or broken fruit is much less inviting than that from perfect sections. If melon is served as an appetizer do not cover it with crushed ice. This harms the flavor and is not a really effective method of chilling. Chill the fruit thoroughly before cutting and serve at once.

A Morning Smile

McPherson went to the chemist for advice. "Man, I've an awful cold," he said. "Hae ye a guld cure for it?"

"Yes," replied the chemist, "I have a sovereign cure." McPherson backed slowly towards the door.

"Looks awa' wi' ye man!" he said. "D'ye no' keep ane aboot fower-pence?"

"Yes," said the oculist, "he had a curious affliction; everything he looked at he saw double." "Poor fellow, I suppose he found it hard to get a job?"

"Not at all. The gas company snapped him up, and now he's reading meters."

Could "Jinny" be a horse? thought Prudence. She was almost sure of it as the "sweet lamb" continued:—"Jinny's a high-stepper, if ever there was one. In great form today. You've seen her? Eh?"

"I really don't know very much about horses," began Prudence awkwardly, when Teddie burst into a great guffaw.

"Oh Lord! How comical! I'm not speaking of the stables, but about a girl! Virginia Dale!" he gurgled. "This beats the band! She'll scream when she hears the howler you've made. Jinny has the real sense of humour. I'll say she has!"

Prudence had reddened to her very ears. They were in the marquee now and Teddie was still chortling, so that people were turning round to look at them.

And heavens—Virginia Dale herself, enchantingly pretty in a Fifth Avenue creation, orchid-tinted, wheeled around from a group of smart young men, and languidly inquired:—

HEARTS AFIRE

By MARY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER IV. Prince Charming to the Rescue

Prudence felt the warm blood rush to her cheeks, and her heart contracted painfully. The stranger had touched that sensitive heart in passing, so that she had been unable to get him out of her thoughts for a single moment since their romantic meeting.

And now... now when there was a chance that she should see him once again, to hear he was the lover of a being so far removed from her own small sphere of life, so infinitely superior to herself, so richly endowed with all the arts of beauty and of fascination... it was cruel!

Jane gave her an odd sidelong glance, opened her lips as though to speak, then closed them definitely.

But none the less did Prudence have the clear impression that her friend had been so minded—could have told a thing or two about the "Traymore fellow" that would have proved hard hearing, and disturbing to her peace of mind.

She shook the feeling off. The sun was shining. She would meet him, trust him. Who knew what happiness the afternoon might bring?

The grounds of Winston Towers were very lovely. A whole raft of gardeners kept them so. For years the green lawns had been rolled and tended, till they had attained that velvet beauty which time alone can bring.

Beds of tulips—pink and red and yellow—made a fascinating splash of colour on the grass. Late daffodils were nodding golden heads. There were plots of pansies, golden-hearted, purple-fringed. And a whole sea of shy forget-me-nots that smiled, blue-eyed, upon the throng of visitors who moved hither on the lawns, the woman gay in pretty colours, and the scene bright and animated.

"So sweet of you to come!" gushed the hostess, extending a fashionably limp hand in welcome, and taking quick survey of Prudence's dress. "My dear Miss Page, if there were more girls like you in the country, I wouldn't have to cram my house with girls from town!"

This was evidently intended as a compliment, and merited a "smart" reply. But Prudence was suddenly overcome with shyness, and that dreadful "bottled-up" sensation which made her feel immeasurably a country bumpkin, tongue-tied. "I'm sure you're dying for a cup of tea," rattled on the hostess. "The marquee's over by the laburnum
