Sinai Codex Bound, Safe for 500 Years

LONDON, Feb. 12—The Codex Sinaiticus, the ancient Bible manuscript which was brought from Russia two years ago for 100,000 pounds has been transformed.

When the Codex came to England it was in an old tin box, its pages were tattered and crumpled, some were loose, and it was wrapped in cotton wool.

Now the Codex has been bound in two magnificent volumes, which were shown for the first time on Saturday to the trustees of the British Museum.

Douglas Cockerel, assisted by his son Sydney, is responsible for the binding, which has involved nearly six months' exacting work. The volumes are bound in oak boards, specially prepared, and white Morocco backs.

The hardest task was treating the 374 leaves of the Codex. On the first, 15 "pathces" were put on, but so cleverly that they are invisible to an inexpert eye.

Every leaf had to be flattened in a stretching frame, and weights of one pound each were attached to a device which ensured an even "pull" in every direction.

All the work was done at the Museum, and in this binding, the experts state, the Codex will last for 500 years.

Elephant Slipped— Also Remembered

EDMONTON, Feb. 12—Because an elephant slipped as it made its way on to the stage of the Edmonton Empire on a Saturday night, it would not return the same way, and six men, helped by a pony, had to work for five hours—and demolished a wall to no purpose—before they could persuade the animal to leave.

The manager of the theatre told a reporter: "When the elephant was coaxed down the slipway she stepped sideways and slipped. Although unhurt she did not forget it, because she refused to return by the same way at the end of her performance. We tried all manner of tricks, but she 'wasn't having any.'

"There is a small door at one end of the stage, and although the elephant tried crawling on its stomach it could not get through. Eventually we decided to unscrew the pass doors into the corridor. The elephant began to crawl through the opening, but was wedged. We then had to demolish one side of the wall, but by this time the elephant was tired of the whole business and refused to move.

"The elephant—her name is Lizzie—works with a pony. The pony was led through the opening, and when it started neighing Lizzie decided to join it. She went down a flight of steps into the auditorium, along a gangway, through a corridor, and out by another exist. We were glad to see the back of her, and we were too tired to be amused. It was 5 a.m."

Searing Roast Beef

Contrary to general opinion among housewives and cooks, the initial searing of beef in roasting, with a view to prevent the escape of juices and more volatile constituents, is not important. As a matter of fact recent scientific experiments in the cooking of meat have shown that, while searing lessens the time, it increases the losses in cooking. Seared roasts, it is true, brown better than those cooked at an even temperature from the start, but on the other hand, roasts cooked at the lower temperature throughout are sufficiently brown to be attractive and they are more evenly cooked. They are less likely to be cooked too much on the outside and extremely rare in the centre. These experments have proved that, while a slightly longer period is necessary when cooking at a lower temperature than was formerly thought advisable, the lower temperature produces a more evenly cooked roast with considerable less shrinkage and loss of fat and the volatile elements.—Beef, How to Choose and Cook it bulletin, Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Saw City Hewn From Woodlots

(By The Canadian Press)

LONDON, Ont. Feb. 10—Residents of North London for more than six decades, Mr. and Mrs. James Coughtrey, who celebrated the 61st anniversary of their wedding, have witnessed the transformation of vacant and wooded lots into fine estates and beautiful residences.

Married at 17, Mrs. Coughtrey reared a family of 11 children, nine sons and two daughters, and back in the days when all baking and sewing was done in the home, it was no light task.

Turning out at one time a batch of 16 loaves of bred, pans of cookies, buns and cakes and large roasts of pork and beef, the London house wife found it necessary to order supplies in large quantities. A list of provisions delivered to the home at the beginning of winter included the following: Twenty pounds of lard, nine barrels of sugar, 1,200 pounds of flour, 30 bags of potatoes one hog and half a beef.

Designing and fashioning the boys' suits from material purchased in the stores and remodelling other garments, the mother in the pioneer home spent many an evening stitching away before the old wood stove, where a huge block roared away the long night hours. Each week brought the regular duties of cleaning, laundrying and mending, which must be performed without the aid of conveniences such as are common in the present-day London home.

Young girls spent many hours patching quilts and preparing the rags for the hit and miss carpet which was made by the weaver. Quilting bees were common but when held in the Baptist or Methodist homes there was no dancing in the evening. Young people of those days assembled and participated in such games as "Spin the Pan", "Button," and "Blind Man's Buff."

Perfume Homey In Olden Days

(Canadian Press)

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 10—Pie-size cakes of rose petals with an indescribable sweetness are among the earliest and most cherished memories of J. C. Fields of Emperia, Va., owner of a most unusual still, writes Ross Well in The Richmond Times-Dispatch. The old, discolored base of the aromatic still has been an heirloom in the Field family for more than 200 years.

Mr. Field recalls that as a child he helped his grandmother operate the still in which she made her own rose water, lavender scent and other perfumes in days before the era of 10-cent vials of eau de Cologne. "My grandmother would gather anywhere from a peck to a half-bushel of petals in the mornings. Perhaps we would start the process about nine o'clock and the finished product would be completed by about one in the afternoon.

"I remember how she would carefully pack the fresh petals in the container, then start her fire of oak bark. This would burn slowly and was always used for the fuel, although I suppose in the earlier times the still was really made to burn charcoal. Gradually the heat would drive the sap in the petals out and it would steam up into the pewter cone, where it was condensed and would drip down the sides."

Santa Is Myth For Age Eight

LONDON, Feb. 10—Two hundred scholars in the Midlands were asked to write essays on Santa Claus, with the ulterior object of discovering at what age, and why, children cease to believe in his existence.

The results are interesting, The Morning Post remarks. The age of eight appears to be the extreme limit of credulity; 75 per cent of seven year olds have serious doubts; six year olds mostly believe; and only about five per cent of five year olds are beginning to suspect their fond parents of deceitful practices.

"It would also be interesting," The Post says, "to know whether the convinced believers had any fear that their parents would be informed of their opinions on the subject, because two can always play at a game of deception, and even a modern subtlety to prevent a profitable myth from exploding too soon. This may partly explain why most children eventually accept disillusionment in a philosophical spirit."

::Miller's Worm Powders do not need the after-help of castor oil or any purgative to complete their thoroughness, because they are thorough in themselves. One dose of them, and they will be found palatable by all children, will end the worm trouble by making the stomach and bowels untenable to the parasites. And not only this, but the powders will be certain to exert most beneficial influences in the digestive organs.

Nursery Rhymes That Make Fun Of Farmers

LICHFIELD, Feb. 11—Does the townsman "look down" on farmers? If so, why? J. H. Wain, president of the National Farmers' Union, blames nursery rhymes for holding farmers and other rural workers up to ridicule.

He told Lichfield farmers at their dinner recently that whenever in a nursery rhyme it was desired to set out something that was ridiculous and foolish it was always done in rural term.

"Little Bo-Peep with its rhyme about sheep—'Leave them alone and they'll come home'—tends to give the impression that farmers are a Micawber sort of people who have a blind trust in Providence.

"In Three Blind Mice, when they selected someone for the mice to run after—"They all ran after the farmer's wife"—though it would be the last woman they would run after," he added.

"Then, what was the moral of Simple Simon, 'Going to the Fair,' which was a well-known rural custom? It was that he was trying to get possession of something for which he was not in a position to pay. I uggest that that principle is flouted much more frequently in the towns than in the country districts."

There was a time, he declared, when farmers were thought to be incapable of either forming or expressing an opinion, and he thought farmers had suffered in the past through exercising and adopting an inferiority complex due in part to the superiority complex other people had always exhibited towards them.

Playground For Quints Planned

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

TORONTO, Feb. 10—The five little Dionne sisters will have a big playground next to the Dafoe Hospital where they can play with other members of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Olivia Dionne, Hon. David A. Croll, Ontario Minister of Welfare, announced today. Mr. Croll just returned from a weekend visit to Callander.

The playground will be surrounded by a high wire fence covered with a substance which permits tourists to look in but prevents the children seeing the curious watchers. It is a substance devised by Prof. W. E. Blatz of the University of Toronto, child psychologist.

All effort will be made, said the minister, to prevent the babies being conscious they are on "exhibition." No longer will they be held up by the nurses on the hospital verandah for the crowds to see.

The playground will be constructed on land beside the hospital which the government is expropriating.

The government intends to interest someone in looking after tourists who go to Callander, said Mr. Croll, for "we owe it to the tourists, who go up there and spend their money, to provide some accommodation."

"OUT OF DANGER"

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

HAVANA, Feb. 10—Friends of the Count of Covadonga, son of former King Alphonso of Spain, said today that physicians had declared him "out of danger" following a series of blood transfusions.

The Count, who suffers from the Spanish Royal Family's traditional disease of haemophilia, slept well last night, following a transfusion yesterday, and gained strength.

120-FOOT CHIMNEY IS FELLED IN LONDON

LONDON, Feb. 12—A chimney-stack 120ft. high, erected in 1822 and weighing 300 tons, probably the last big boiler chimney in the City of London, was felled recently. It stood at the back of premises belonging to Messrs. W. H. Chapman and Co., wine merchants, of the Minories, which are being demolished. The chimney, which was only 10ft. from a railway bridge and 40ft. from a street, crashed into the narrow area prescribed by those in charge of the felling.

Workmen employed by a firm of Lancashire steeplejacks carried out the task. Bricks were removed from one side of the square base and wooden supports substituted. Then a bonfire was lighted under the chimney, and as the flames burned through the supports the stack toppled and fell along the path cleared for it.
