COULDN'T SING — COWBOY STAR GOT CONTRACT

When Roy Rogers came to Republic four years ago to make his bid for fame as a cowboy star, he couldn't sing!

The vocalist cowboy, who is starred currently in "Bad Man of Deadwood" at the Capitol Theatre, heard that Republic was looking for a new cowboy star, and he went straightway to the studio, only to find that he couldn't get past the front gate.

Not one to be dismayed, Roy awaited an opportunity to put his foot in the door when someone else was entering, so that the latch wouldn't catch, and eased himself in when the gatekeeper's back was turned.

He found his way to a casting executive, who asked him to sing. Roy ran all the way to his car for his guitar, ran all the way back, and found that he was too out-of-breath to sing!

The executive, amused at the eagerness of the young would-be cowboy, allowed him to rest a few moments and try again.

That "try" was so successful that he was immediately placed under contract.

For Eczema -- Skin Troubles

Make up your mind today that you are going to give your skin real chance to get well. Go to any good drug store and get an original bottle of Moon's Emerald Oil—it lasts many days because it is highly concentrated.

The very first application will give you relief—the itching of Eczema is instantly stopped—eruptions dry up and scale off in a very few days. The same is true of Itching Tons and Feet, Barber's Itch, Salt Rheum and other skin troubles.

Remember that Moon's Emerald Oil is a clean, powerful, penetrating Antiseptic Oil that does not stain or leave a greasy residue. Complete satisfaction or money back.

EMERALD WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

On Tuesday, September 9, the regular monthly meeting of the Emerald Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. Earle MacCarville, with eight members present. Meeting opened by repeating Club Women's Creed in unison. Following the roll call, which was responded to by a picking recipe, the minutes were read and approved. Money was contributed by the members towards the purchase of Mobile Kitchens for the P.W.S.L. Reports were received from the school and sick committees and new committees were appointed. Following this, the members discussed the making of a quilt for the Red Cross. It was decided that a start be made at same, by each member bringing two squares for the quilt to the next meeting, this would also serve as roll call. On motion, meeting adjourned. The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. Percy Murphy.

HAND-WORKED TRIMS FALL DRESS FEATURES

Hand-worked detail feature some of the season's very smartest woolen dresses. Hand-knit or crocheted front sections of bodices and jackets, reverse, entire sleeves and yokes, with a band of the hand-made trimming at the high round or square neckline is not unusual. But one-color themes are smarter.

Jane smiled. "It's been an awful long time since having you around was a bother to me, Greg."

"I'd just like to see him try to get out of having supper with us," said Aunt Emily. "I've a million and one questions to ask him about all my friends at home. Jane, you run and get your coat and I'll get all this business here cleared up."

When they were in a taxi en route to the hotel, Aunt Emily relayed with a weary little sigh. "Darling, you're all worn out. I should have made you stay at the hotel to-night."

Jane eyes widened.

Aunt Emily sniffed. "She likes to get along without me. Maybe she could, but I'd rather believe she couldn't." Jane laughed and squeezed her hand.

Greg could not but note that there was a much better understanding between the two than when they had left Oakton, and he was sincerely glad. Jane needed love and tenderness, and Aunt Emily no longer seemed to make a terrific effort to hide her genuine affection for the girl.

At the hotel, Jane ordered supper sent up to her suite. As they ate, they chatted gaily. With Greg giving news of friends back in Oakton.

Then, Aunt Emily rose and said, "I'm not going to be coy and pretend that I have letters to write in order to leave you two alone. I'm just going to say frankly that I know you've got an awful lot of things to talk about. I'll see you in the morning, Greg, and don't keep Jane up too late though she can sleep until noon if she likes, for there isn't anything on the calendar until the Women's Club luncheon at one. I'm honest-to-goodness pilot, whether Aleck Randall thinks so or not."

"Of course you are, if that's what you want," said Greg, his voice taut. "And it is what you want, isn't it?"

For the barest fraction of a second, Jane was still. Then she said hurriedly, "Oh, yes—of course it's what I want."

"Then you'll get it," said Greg. "I've discovered that you're the sort of person who gets what you want because you go after it so hard."

There was something in his tone that made Jane a little uneasy.

She changed the subject, saying brightly, "And now, tell me all about yourself. How are things in Oakton? And how's Doris Stewart?"

"Oakton's fine. Nothing very exciting ever happens there, Doris. Oh, she's fine, too. She's just come back from a trip to New York with scads of good-looking clothes and giving the town a treat by finding a lot of parties to show them off. Add to the town's gaiety no little."

"Jane said, after a moment, "Maybe you'll laugh at me, but I used to think that you and Doris—that you—well, liked each other a lot—"

"What's so funny about that?" Greg asked sharply. "We did—any do."

Jane felt as though she had been slapped, but managed to say lightly, "Well, it would be a very good match. I'm sure her parents would be pleased to deal—"

"I didn't say I was going to marry her, just because I like her, you see. I mean, I doubt whether she'd have me."

"Oh, she'd have you all right, like a shot. Why wouldn't she? You wouldn't any girl?" demanded Jane. Greg laughed. "Careful, you're putting ideas in my head. What me to get a crush on myself?"

"Well, it—it's true," stammered Jane. "Any girl should be glad to marry you."

Greg's face sobered, and he looked at her without speaking. Then he rose, took hold of her hands and pulled her to her feet. For a moment they stood there facing each other.

Then, suddenly, his arms shot out and caught her close. He bent his head and kissed her hard.

At that instant, a knock sounded on the door, and a waiter's voice asked if he might come in to remove the supper dishes. Jane's heart cried out in sharp protest against the interruption.

Greg, releasing her, stalked to the door and swung it open. When he had admitted the waiter, he placed up his hat and looked at Jane over the man's shoulder.

"I'd better run along now," he said swiftly. "I'll see you in the morning."

As he turned and abruptly departed, Jane stared after him, her eyes like stars. (To be Continued)
