MODERN TRAMWAYS MENACE ANCIENT ARCHES OF PEKING

PEKING, Aug. 25.—The "pallous," ornamental archlike affairs of wooden beams with carvings and scrolls painted in blues, greens and reds and which lend an added quaintness to Peking's streets, are threatened with destruction through construction of street railways in the capital.

The "pallous" span the principal streets at intervals. Their bases restrict the roadway and would interfere with the proposed surface lines. The municipal authorities are putting up a fight for their preservation or rebuilding where it is absolutely essential that they be pulled down, but the tramway company opposes this idea on the ground of expense.

THE TALK

Chapter 61

When the door shut behind me I had the uncanny sensation of having shut myself off from one sort of life and into another. The other faced me as rather blank and desolate. Yet I had worked hard to make the new apartment attractive, and I knew that by daylight it would seem so.

But now it was four strange walls and a glare of unshaded electric lights, unfamiliar furniture, and myself with a handbag standing in the center of the floor, the stranger who had arrived.

Fortunately the trunks were brought then. So in the necessity of unpacking, I lost the first terrible chill of leaving home for a strange new dwelling.

And the following morning the place did look better to me. At least, it looked as well as any place could to me without Win alone.

I wondered what Winthrop thought. He had some warning that I was going to leave, because of our talk the night before. Would he be worried? Would he be shocked in a realization of how serious our differences had been? Would he, perhaps, come around and try to make up?

I had purposely left my new number with Ellen, so my other trunks and my mail could be sent to me. So Win would have my address.

I wondered whether he would be worried that night when he came in and found me gone. Of course, if he were upset, he would wake Ellen or the cook and find out from them what had happened and where I was. I was sure I would have some word the morning after I left.

But there was none. It was strange to get up and have no mail and no waiting breakfast. I dressed and went out and marketed and went back to cook my eggs and toast. I rather enjoyed that, in spite of my loneliness. And I spent the morning cleaning and fixing the new flat, and lunched at a little tea-shop nearby.

Toward evening I phoned Colin, who came around at once.

"It's all over town already," he announced when he came in. "I met Sonia on the street on my way here, she knew it. What did Win say?"

"Nothing. He did not know I was going so soon, though he knew it had to happen."

"You didn't even say goodbye?"

"I hesitated. Then I answered in a low voice:

"I couldn't."

Colin walked up and down the living room, apparently examining the new possessions in it. His face was drawn up in a frown of concentration, he rumbled up his shock of red hair with his hands, a sure sign of his part that he was deeply troubled.

"Well!" he exclaimed at last. And a little later he repeated it.

"Well! I suppose it's the best thing. Everyone you know is prob-

Molasses Has New Uses Since Hawaii Went Dry

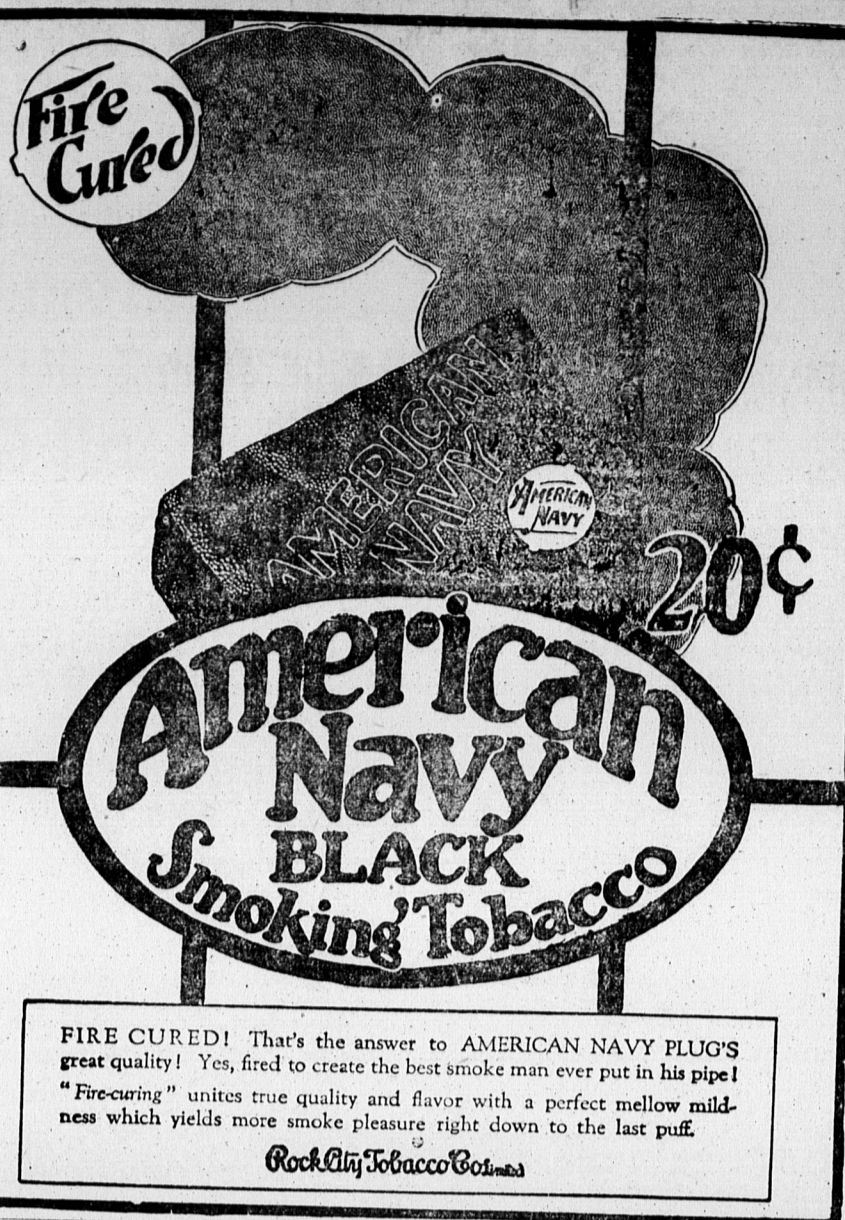

(Associated Press)

HONOLULU, Aug. 24.—New uses which have been found for molasses, mainly a waste product of the Hawaiian sugar plantation since the enactment of the prohibition act, are expected to exhaust the supply this year, according to an announcement by the Sugar Factors, which handle most of the Hawaiian crop.

Prior to prohibition, the plantations derived a considerable income from the molasses shipments to the mainland which were used for the manufacture of alcohol. Since then the molasses, which has a sugar content of one-fifth, has been used as fuel or thrown into the ocean.

A discovery that molasses may be used as a culture medium in the production of yeast, has created a considerable demand recently. It also has been found that molasses makes a valuable feed for stock, as it is said, it has about twice the energy value of any other feed tested. These two developments are expected to utilize most of the molasses produced by the plantations.

The new demand is expected to add approximately $1,000,000 to the income of the Hawaiian plantations this year.

"No, I'd rather stay here for awhile, if you don't mind." She looked her surprise. Then she found the explanation that suited her best, and promptly adopted it.

"Well, of course, you'll hear less gossip if you stay here—you can't shut people out. And lots won't come to see you. You're not in the right neighborhood. Try it for a few weeks, then move to my house. We'll see whether we can't get Winthrop out of town. It ought to be nothing else all day but this. Mary phoned you late last night and your mail told her you had gone and had given her your address. Ellen was so upset she gave it all away. We might run up to Canada until the talk blows over."
