English Woman To Tell Story of Raid Experiences Over C.F. C.Y. Sunday

The Queen's Canadian Fund for Air Raid Victims is presenting MRS. O'MALLEY'S STORY from Station CFCY at 8:00 o'clock on Sunday August 24.

It is an English working woman's story of her raid experiences, told in her own words—the story of the death of her husband and daughter. She has been evacuated to the countryside with her two surviving children, and her arduous, thrilling story gives a picture of the dangers of city life in Britain and of her indomitable spirit with which the civilians of the United Kingdom face their trials.

THE LIKEABLE MAN

By SYLVESTER CAIRN

"No doctor, unless you think we can't manage." "I'll mean nursing." But he seemed to take it for granted that Mrs. Dixon was not afraid of that.

For the next few days every breath was agony and every movement was torment. Gerald had no thought of where he was or who nursed him. Then the pain abated and he realized where he was. Mrs. Dixon and the stout cook shared the nursing.

Looking back on that time, Gerald wondered how the family fared for the next few days. He seemed always with him, moving amazingly quietly for one of her bulk, smiling at him reassuringly when he was afraid to breathe and shrank from her touch.

She always addressed him respectfully with "Now sir, if you please, we just do this or that." But she bullied him as if he had been a tiresome small boy. Then she told him frankly that of all the invalids she had nursed he was the worst.

He had looked at her as well as his pillows—and he told her so. "For the next few days every breath was agony and every movement was torment." "I'll mean nursing." But he seemed to take it for granted that Mrs. Dixon was not afraid of that.

CHAPTER VII

MISS MADDEN—AND FRIENDS

Mrs. Dixon spent hours a day in Gerald's room, letting other things slide in order to keep him company. She talked to people and places, and told him a lot about Westwood, of which she seemed so proud as her husband.

"You'll love it in spring," she said, seeming to forget that he would not see it then.

She spoke a lot about his mistress, Elizabeth Madden, but Gerald could hardly stimulate interest in her. He had had more than enough of girl's chatter and gossip.

"She's charming. So sweet and generous!—and so rare in a girl who's had everything all her life—left an orphan so young, too!" Gerald felt grimly that one could afford to be sweet and generous under such circumstances, but he only said:

"Does she live alone at Westwood?" "Dear me, no. That's like her, too. There's poor Miss Baynes, who was her governess and stayed on as companion. Now she's crippled with rheumatism, but she's there for the rest of her life. Then there's Nesta Brown, a cousin of Elizabeth's. Some people think she's the prettier of the two, but she's quite different. You'll know what I mean when you see."

"As was saying, Nesta just lives there. She hasn't got a penny of her own and I shouldn't think she was much of a companion to Elizabeth. Their tastes are so different. I often wonder what she'll do when Elizabeth marries."

"She'll likely go!" Privately Gerald thought this paragon of all the virtues sounded dull enough to keep any man away.

The meeting opened with the Ode, Creed, followed by the Secretary's report of the previous meeting which stood approved. Roll Call was answered by naming a notable Canadian person in Canadian History. Sick Committee reported, no sick calls being made. Mrs. M. McLeod, reported, $7.00 sent to Red Cross from District Convention and $1.25 reserved for expenses. Secretary read letters from P. E. Island Tubercular League regarding delegates to convention on Sept. 10th and 11th.

and she sighed. "I thought Mr. Dixon did all that part of it."

"Yes, but George isn't too strong, and I don't want him to work till he's too old to enjoy life."

Gerald listened to Mrs. Dixon's kindly gossip, and played chess with Mr. Dixon and tried to grow strong. The doctor always told him there was no hurry—but what did the doctor know about it? Mr. Dixon had never spoken again of helping Jim to get a job, and Gerald was too proud to introduce the subject.

Finally, he spoke of Doctor Laurie, although the doctor's bluntness always made him shrink into himself.

"Work? The kind of thing you were doing before? You couldn't stand it for a day and you know it. Don't you realize when you're well that you're being unreasonable. And Mrs. Dixon likes having you. Her only grievance is that you don't need nursing still!" and he laughed. Gerald said no more, but he could not go on accepting charity indefinitely.

HEALTH

A HEALTHY SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION THROUGH THE INSURANCE COMPANIES OF CANADA

MANITOBA — A review of the work accomplished by the St. James—St. Vital Health Unit, Manitoba, published in a recent issue of the Canadian Public Health Journal, shows that this experiment in public health service has finished its first ten years as a decided success.

Besides home nursing and popular educational work undertaken by the unit, which serves two municipalities of Greater Winnipeg, regular inspections of school children of the districts are made and cases of disease weeded out.

In areas not served by the Greater Winnipeg Water District, all dairies are inspected regularly and frequently examined. In some cases wells have been condemned and sealed.

The Unit sees that all dairies and milk vendors are licensed, and that wells are rigorously and frequently examined. In some cases wells have been condemned and sealed.

With the assistance of the Laboratory of the Provincial Department of Health, and the Central Chest Clinic, urinalysis, blood counts, and X-ray examinations are made in cases where they are required, while cases of venereal disease are referred to the Government Clinic.

Immunization against preventable diseases has become one of the important activities of the Unit. As a result, diphtheria cases in the district declined from 28 in 1931 to 3 in 1939. Child welfare and dental clinics,
