A Sweetheart At Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION
By Marion Rubincam

AN UNKIND REMARK

Chapter 8

So it was decided Violet could go, as far as the money was concerned. When her first enthusiasm was over—and she was pleased enough to more than reward me for the gifts of my little inheritance—she ran out to the kitchen again to write to all the nearer girls colleges for catalogues.
James and Laura came home while she was out.
Laura, at 21, was the image of Esther at 18. Indeed, one day, Laura had put on her mother's old wedding gown to go to a dress up party, and then had combed her hair to imitate Esther's then—
"For Esther had had a photograph taken of herself in all her wedding finery, and the picture was in the place of honor in a brass frame on the parlour mantel. And for a joke, Bud Pearsall had brought around his camera and taken a picture of Laura, in the same prim attitude Esther had posed in, full face, and holding a bouquet of flowers. And the snapshot might have been taken of the picture instead of the girl, so much alike did they seem."
"Laura's all my family," Esther would often say complacently.
She was already too stout, her figure was of the matronly maturity of 30. Her skin was the wonderful creamy whiteness of the healthy country girl, her cheeks were prettily pink. She had brownish-gold hair, straight and lank, and it never combed neatly. Her gray eyes were always bland in expression, except for occasional bursts of sullenness. Her nose would not be nicely shaped had it not been thick at the tip and her mouth was heavy. She was ordinarily good natured; she hated lessons, indeed she left in the second year of High School. She read perhaps two books a year and they were novels.
But her shoulders were beautifully formed, her arms as strong and white and firm as could be. She had chubby hands too, and small, dull nails that broke easily. Esther loved housework and her greatest joy was to bake a better cake than any other woman in the village. There was no bond between herself and Violet at all.
Laura was smiling with pleasure when she came in.
"Look mother!" she exclaimed holding out a piece of linen. "I've done all this today. Mrs. Dwyer showed me a new stitch—so fast you can do yards—"
She broke off as Violet came into the room.
"Guess what Laura! Vi cried. "I'm going to college—this fall."
The smile of satisfaction on Laura's face changed slowly, as

The first Harvest Excursions via Canadian National Railways proved a great success, many thousands of energetic workers taking advantage of the cheap fares from all Eastern Points to Winnipeg, and the low fares prevailing to points beyond.

Britain to Make Thorough Study of Land of Tibet

LONDON, Aug. 11—Great Britain intends to make a thorough study of the little known land of Tibet, where devil-worship and belief in ghosts still exist. A mission composed of some of England's ablest explorers, scientists, missionaries and ethnologists soon will leave London for the city of Lhasa, which is buried behind the world's greatest rampart of mountains, the Himalayas, between India and China. The mission will proceed under the auspices of the International Buddhist Union, representing all schools of Buddhism of the United States.

The mission will make a closer investigation of the Tibetan people, their customs, religion and language, than has yet been possible, together with a study of rare books and manuscripts known to exist in the monastic libraries. These are expected to prove of the greatest value, not only to Buddhist scholarship and to the study of comparative religion, but to fill many gaps that at present exist in the world's knowledge of the early history of a country which to the present day is veiled in mystery.

The Tibetans live in mountain strongholds, 15,000 feet above the level of the sea, which is 500 feet higher than Mount Whitney, the highest peak in the United States. They have always proved inhospitable to foreigners and to the introduction of modern ideas. Little is known of the origin of the people. Local tradition has it that the progenitors of the race were "a she-devil of the Himalayas" and an ape from the plains of Hindustan.

The last foreigner in Tibet was an American medical missionary, Dr. A. L. Shelton, of San Francisco, who spent 17 years at Batang.

Dr. Shelton found that the Tibetan woman usually marries three or four brothers, and in one case that came under his observation a woman had six brothers for husbands. The oldest is considered the father and the other brothers the uncles of the family. Woman occupies a superior position. She is master of the home and farm. Grass worms, fungi, and the horns of young deer, ground to powder, are considered by the Tibetans infallible medicinal remedies for all ills, and are even held in high favor as table delicacies.

Thousands of years of isolation have paralyzed the progress of the people. There is no public instruction. Pagan forms of worship prevail. Only the most elemental form of government exist. Officers against the law which is derived largely from the Kanjur, the Buddhist Bible, a work of 108 volumes, are punished by having their hands and feet amputated. When a Tibetan dies his body is dismembered and fed to vultures. The people are extremely poor. They dress in sheepskins and the usual rule is one garment to a person.

While whole milk is rich in the fat-soluble vitamins, the amount of this vitamin in centrifugal skim milk is only one-tenth of that found in whole milk, or even less. This fact is of much importance in swine and poultry feeding. Clifton Hoard's Dairyman. Furthermore, it has a profound bearing on human nutrition, especially in the use of "filled milk," which is evaporated skim milk to which cocconut oil has been added as a substitute for whole milk. "Filled milk" has been found to be so deficient in fat-soluble vitamins that it will not sustain normal growth in rats, even when liberal amounts are supplied.

The man who is square grows in popularity even though he seems to be going in the opposite direction.
