TONIGHT'S GAME

Abegetts will entertain Summerside Crystal, Prince Edward Island league leaders at the local Arena tonight.

The western aggregation will leave by special train this afternoon accompanied by a large band of rooters. It is expected they will arrive this evening about 7 o'clock.

Tonight's game will mark the first appearance this season of the Crystal on Charlottetown ice. They have a snappy, heady and fast skating array of hockeyists who open fast on the whistle and maintain, to a certain extent, the speedy clip throughout.

This fast sextette which has turned both the Abegetts and Victorias back is handled by Roy Frowse, former professional hockey star of the Regina Capitals. Frowse, who is a Charlottetown boy, is now making his home in Summerside and as coach of the team is making wonderful success. His vast knowledge of the game and great experience is being clearly shown by the way the Summerside boys are travelling this season. However, tonight's game has all the earmarks of a tough and close encounter. The Abegetts are determined and Fred Moore, their coach, is confident his team can come through on the top side of the scoring. At any rate the fans are all set and ready for a handsome hockey treat tonight.

LEST WE FORGET

Tex Rickard whose recent death has caused a convulsion in the sport world exercised a tremendous influence on hockey at the time of its entry into New York. It was the magic of the Rickard name used with telling effect by Tommy Gorman in particular in his publicity efforts for the Americans that was a big factor in putting hockey over in New York. The American public warmed by the name took to hockey. They had confidence that anything Rickard was connected with was bound to be a success.

Singularly Rickard took little interest in hockey though the opening first night crowd gave him a great idea. Americans played Canadians that night and to interest society a part of the funds were donated to some big New York charity. The result was that fifteen thousand people of whom half were in dress suits a quarter of that half, low necked sat in on the premiere.

This was the crowd Rickard liked and the crowd he wanted for his fights. It gave him the idea of enlisting millionaires to his enterprises, and it was the idea a horn of that moment that paved the way to his greatest successes in fistic affairs which came later.

A LARGE EVENING

It was the evening of the entry of Americans into the National League that this operative eager to find out what manner of man Rickard was, had a short interview with him, inconsequential in itself, but interesting as a revelation of how he worked. Previously he had made a speech which astounded by the manner in which he handled big figures. He tossed them around with reckless abandon. His use of them in such quantity have since been justified, though many of his auditors thought at the time he was putting on the dog.

As a bit of oratory his speech was a flat failure, and the grammar was a bit misplaced, but as an evidence of his judgment and vision, it was a standout, viewed by the light of later events. Strangely enough Rickard impressed as a shy man in the light conversation held later. He admitted blandly he knew nothing of hockey, but thought there was money in it, and declared it was worth a "gamble" anyway. To him it meant an extra attraction for the Garden he had promoted, and that meant something because the new Garden was his dream and great accomplishment.

WALKER MUST FIGHT

It is back to the wars for Mickey Walker. Turn and twist as he will, the playboy no longer can idle his time. His challengers are on his heels. He must face about, fight, or forever relinquish the right to the middleweight championship of the fistic world. Some such dictum has been issued by boxing promoters. The fans have yelled it insistently for some time. Now that the purse payers are joined in the chorus, it is more than probable Mickey of Elizabeth, New Jersey, will listen. This, of course, comes from allowing the elite and just ordinary citizens to weight candidates slamed each other about a Madison Square Garden ring. Referring, of course, to that recent affair the box between the Wildcat Ace Hudkins and the Fox Rene De Vos of Belgium. It is a matter of record that Hudkins gained the laurels in the ring. De Vos was tendered a banquet and introduced socially no end, but the Wildcat was triumphant, even if denied the after glory of rubbing elbows with bloods of the blue. The head-on collision of Hudkins and De Vos so, excited the citizenry that the clamor for more was terrific. And boxing promoters are never deaf to noise of that sort. It would be impossible to supply more of the same without Walker, unless it was to bring Hudkins and De Vos back into the picture again.

Walker hardly can have any too much pride in his accomplishments as a middleweight. He won the crown from the late Tiger Flowers by a decision that flabbergasted Chicago, where the event was held. Walker's side of this has been heard and he has convincing points to offer to show that had the decision gone to Flowers it would have been a greater robbery. Chicago is a favorite spot if not a safe one. Walker defended against Ace Hudkins out there and again the spectators asked for a rope to lynch the referee, who gave the decision to Walker. Again Walker explained that he gave Hudkins a mighty licking and asked the incredulous to just wait until Hudkins should try to fight again. This, Walker seemed to indicate, would show that the Wildcat had been set so far back on his heels he never would get down. But Hudkins disproved this theory easily and now is clamoring again for Walker's scalp. The fight is a natural—a natural being a promoter's term for any shining that will attract the multitudes.

Her attendant was her cousin, Miss Annie Bell, who was attired in a dress of pink georgette and carried a bouquet of roses. Mr. P. G. Wright, Moose Jaw, brother of the groom, acted as best man. After the wedding a buffet lunch was served to the guests, and several toasts were drunk to the health of the young couple which was well responded to by Mr. Wright. The popularity of the contracting parties was very strongly attested to by numerous and beautiful gifts. AVIATION IN CANADA.

Q. What is the progress of aviation in Canada?

A. Canada is making marked progress in aviation, both Governmentally, and commercially. Aircraft is now being manufactured in the Dominion and commercial companies are doubling their flying time year by year. The Canadian Air Force is co-operating with provincial governments in aerial services, such as fire patrolling, aerial surveying, mining, exploration, etc. The Dominion Government has recently ordered seventy aeroplanes to be added to its growing staff.
