(C. "But I saw nothing compared with what it will be during the Royal wedding festivities. They are preparing for thousands of visitors and this month will record one of the biggest booms the London merchants and shopkeepers have known for years."

British

Equal Status It was learned the British, in their compromise proposal, pointed out Japan had declared she wanted a "common upper limit" but at the same time had said she had no intention of building up to that "ceiling." Britain therefore asked Japan whether her claim for parity could not be met merely by acknowledgement of her equal status, together with continuance of regulation of the size of navies. Another idea submitted to Japan was that instead of the Washington ratio system the relative strength of the principal navies should be preserved more or less in their present order by the powers declaring their naval building programmes for five or 10 years ahead. This was the way the British hoped to get around the stubborn Japanese insistence on doing away with the Washington Treaty and its ratio system.

Further Meeting

The Japanese however rejected the British proposals firmly. It was expected a further meeting between the full delegations of Britain and Japan would be held shortly. The Japanese reply was transferred today by Ambassador Tsubono Matsuda to Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, at the Foreign Office. The British are still striving hard to reach an agreement, but the prospects are fading rapidly. If an agreement is not possible, then an Anglo-American agreement is envisaged, to which Japan would be able to subscribe later.

British Parliament Opens Today

Indian Home Rule Question Seen As Major Legislation Before House. (By Oscar Leiding Associated Press Staff Writer) LONDON, Nov. 19.—Parliament's fourth session will be opened tomorrow by the King with brilliant pageantry, and Great Britain's law-makers will get down to work on business that promises many lively debates. Dominated in its preoccupations by troubled conditions on the Continent and the necessity to decide the Indian home rule question, parliament is expected to lose time in throwing its legislative machinery into high gear.

Glittering Ceremony

The glittering ceremony with which the King will usher in the fourth session of the eighth parliament of his reign will have barely faded away before the problems of the United Kingdom and the Empire will stand squarely before the members. The question of a new constitution for India will not only be the most important feature of the session but one of the most momentous Empire problems of modern times. On Wednesday a joint committee of both Houses will issue its report on the Government's India policy as enunciated in the white paper issued last March, upon which a parliamentary bill will be based.

Home Rule

The Conservative party is divided over the home rule question while Labor wants full self-rule granted. Feeling runs high. India has a population of 355,000,000 people speaking 225 different languages, and the question of allowing the vast country to rule itself has stirred strong feeling in all classes. The Home Rule plan in general was expected to group together the provinces of India as a federation, with a congress or legislature replacing the present general assembly. A Governor-General would be the British representative, as in Canada. Although India reform overshadows the whole programme, parliament also will be called upon to deal with important domestic questions. Air transportation has placed Spain, Sweden, Norway, Austria and Czechoslovakia within a day's journey of London.
