Back From Death Pope Marks Life With Mind Vigor

VATICAN CITY, Feb. 9.—(CP)—Pope Pius XI today is a stooped man, 80 years old, with face ashen, steps slow and gestures pathetically weak.

There still is fire in his eyes and his lips bear the ire of the great dictators, but the real wonder is that he sits at all on the throne of St. Peter. On Sunday, Feb. 6, the pontifical flag flew over the Vatican buildings to mark the 16th anniversary of his accession.

His Holiness plans at Easter to preside at the Pascal high mass in St. Peter's. Preparations for canonization will require him to preside over dozens of meetings of the Congregation of Rites. Perhaps he will give final approval for the beatification of his favorite predecessor, Pope Pius X, whose name he took and whose care for sainthood already has been filled.

With mental vigor surprising in one who had been so ill, the Pope has tackled three major problems—the spread of bolshevism, the development of neopaganism in Germany and the suppression of Catholic activities by the Nazi government and the religious situation in Spain.

Only a year ago Pope Pius lay near death in his sparsely-furnished apartment at the Vatican palace. Newspapers in every kind carried bulletins on his condition, and the world's 250,000,000 Catholics awaited late reports anxiously.

Pope Pius himself has thanked God for his almost miraculous recovery and has asked all Catholics to join in the thanks. His personal physician, Dr. Amintore Milani, says the Pope's own will to live was the best medicine. Although his Holiness was unafraid of death and said repeatedly he had resigned himself to God, he declared also that he was determined to live and work for the church.

A complication of ailments endangered the Pope—principally hardening of the arteries, weakness of the heart, a thyma, and varicose veins which partially paralyzed his legs for many weeks. To meet these threats, Dr. Milani ordered rest. For the hardening of the arteries, he admitted that was no cure. But he sought to curb its progress. This illness, together with an uncertain heart condition, still afflicts the Pope and his full work program often makes Dr. Milani look askance.

Haiti Invites More Business With Dominion

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti, Feb. 10.—(CP)—Haiti is anxious to increase its trade with Canada, a delegation from the Dominion was told by President Stenio Vincent.

The president received the delegation in the gleaming white presidential palace, resembling the White House at Washington, which has inaugurated a new steamship service to the island. Included in the group were Major J. C. Parmelee, Canada's deputy minister of trade and commerce; Hon. Onesime Gagnon, Quebec minister of mines, game and fisheries; and Desmond Clarke of the Clarke Steamship Company.

President Vincent, a quiet-spoken little man, faultlessly dressed in tropical attire, congratulated the Canadians on their enterprise in establishing the new service which links Miami, Haiti, Jamaica, and Cuba.

"We like Canada and want to do more business with Canada," said the supreme ruler of the Haitians, told Major Parmelee who extended the official greeting on behalf of the Canadian government.

The president spoke of how much pleasure it had given him to welcome a delegation from Quebec which visited Haiti a short time ago. It was a party of 30 who came to Port au Prince on a return call following a visit of a group of Haitians to Quebec last June for the French Language Conference.

Turning to the Quebec minister of mines, President Vincent said, in his cultured French that on his visit to Canada he lingered several days in Quebec "because Quebec has retained a real colonial perfume."

The great anchor reputedly from Columbus' ship Santa Maria, wrecked off the island, has a prominent place in the main entrance of the presidential palace. Politely attentive tell visitors that the discoverer of America first landed. The island is peopled by 3,000,000 Haitians and about 800,000 Dominicans, who, according to the Haitians are not appreciable neighbors.

Around the palace stretches the colorful city of Port au Prince with a hot sun pouring down on its quaint streets filled with children—all talking French. Women with the erect carriage of guardsmen balance great baskets of produce on their heads. Contrasting with this picture are here and there gleaming white modern buildings and the foot of a motor horn compels the native fruit carrier astride a burro, to quicken his pace or be passed by the modern machine which is fast invading the island.

Continues Work Despite Danger

JERUSALEM, Feb. 10.—(CP)—Reuters—In spite of insecurity owing to lawless roving bands, Sir Flinders Petrie, 85-year-old British Archaeologist, has gone into the desert with Lady Petrie to continue excavations at Tell Ajlul.

In olden times this area was well populated and the "Tell" or mound contains striking evidence of the successive Philistine and Israelite periods of history.

The aged Archaeologist, who lives in Jerusalem thinks nothing of putting in an arduous day at the "dig." He personally examines all finds and ships them carefully.

J. L. Stargely, British Archaeologist, murdered near Hebron Jan. 10, put in his first years of work under the direction of Sir Flinders.

Church Years For New Vigor Of Conscience

By I. NORMAN SMITH
Canadian Press Staff Writer
LONDON, Feb. 10.—The vitality of the church—embracing all creeds—has been the subject of outspoken preachings and writings in recent weeks. The Archbishop of Canterbury began by a new year talk in which he said his "Recall to Religion" had commendable results in 1937 but that the march was really only beginning.

The Dean of St. Paul's followed this up with a plea for more conscientious observance of personal and social duties. The most disquieting sign of the failure of the church is to me, as it was to the late Canon Sheppard, the complacency which it often shows in the face of crisis.

But it was left to Dr. Henry Wilson, Bishop of Chelmsford, to write that "popular services, bright little chats from the pulpit and pleasant Sunday afternoons have just degraded worship to a third-rate entertainment."

The Archbishop of Canterbury, addressing the convocation of Westminster Abbey, was pleased to note a minimum of party bitterness in England and in his general references to the recurring problem of union with the Free Churches he was markedly moderate. He expressed great appreciation of the way in which the leaders of the Free Churches had put in a word for the English Church representatives.

Guidance Needed

The Dean of St. Paul's, Very Rev. W. R. Matthews, writing in the London Star on the question of that paper's 50th anniversary, had doubts about the church's own work.

"There is a great deal of Christian thinking of a high quality, but some of it," he wrote, "is about subjects which are of secondary importance and the really vital thought falls, on the whole, to get across to the people who would welcome it, if it could be put in language which meant something to them."

"The man on the street, who is so sparsely represented in the pew, feels that the church ought to have some definite guidance to give on the problems which confront him every day, on war, on Communism and Fascism, on poverty and wealth, on sex. Is he not right? And is not our fumbling with such moral issues the sign of a failure of nerve?"

"With what kind of authority can the church claim the spiritual leadership of the people, if it has nothing to offer on major issues but an open mind?"

A warning that Britain should
