KINGSTON Y. P. U.

The Kingston Y. P. U. met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Parker Newson's. The president brought the meeting to order by calling on the devotional leader. A short devotional period was led by Mildred Green. The minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Roll call was answered by 11 members and 2 visitors. Collection was taken which amounted to 70 cents. The following committees were appointed for the next meeting.

Dev.: Velda.
Study: Ray and Mildred.
Recreation: Velda and Ray.
Lunch: Edna and Shirley.
Mildred invited the members to meet at her home for the next meeting.
The study period was led by Edna and Velda.
The remainder of the evening was spent in games and contests.
A delightful lunch was served by the hostess and assisted by Mildred.
A hearty vote of thanks was extended to Mr. and Mrs. Newson for the use of their home and the kind hospitality shown.
The meeting closed by all repeating the Mizpah Benediction.

No Harsh Laxatives in Two Years!

Man Finds Relief With Famous Cereal

If you are nagged by constipation worries, read this unsolicited letter:

"Constipation cost me plenty of money for strong remedies! But since I started eating KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN regularly over two years ago, I haven't had to take any laxative. Doing fine, feeling fine! Wish everyone troubled as I was by constipation would try it." W. J. Riley, Molson, Manitoba.

Constipated due to lack of bulk in your diet? You may find relief from sluggishness and taking harsh laxatives. For natural results, try eating an ounce (bowful) of crisp, tasty ALL-BRAN every day. ALL-BRAN is a delicious regulating food, not a purgative. Try one package and if it doesn't help you, you can get double your money back. Simply return empty box to Kellogg's, London, Ont.

AN IDOL CRASHES

Hendon — and high summer! The sun blazing down out of a cloudless sky; glittering on the hundreds and hundreds of ranked cars parked together for the occasion of Empire Air Day; setting off to the best possible advantage the new London season's hats and frocks. Thousands and thousands of people crowded together, their faces intermittently turning skywards from the stands.

Young Anthony Sothorn pushed his exquisite grey hat back from his forehead, and mopped that same forehead with a grey silk handkerchief. The expression on his good-looking face was definitely petulant, while the single glass jammed over his right eye added affliction to what might otherwise have passed for mere foppishness.

Not that young Sothorn was an idler or a wastrel. True, he was an Honourable. True that his hair curled naturally, that he dressed too well, that he spoke with an Eton and Oxford voice, and declined to be ashamed of doing so—having been at Eton and Oxford. But he had come down with the best scientific degree of his year. And in the normal course of events he worked ten hours a day in the capacity of private secretary to Professor Hubert Manson, the celebrated archaeologist, and worked exceedingly hard.

Something of his petulance could at the moment be ascribed to the fact that Anthony would have infinitely preferred to have been at the British Museum than at Hendon.

"I don't know why on earth you wanted to come out to such a god-forsaken sort of jamboree!" he grumbled.

"I just wanted to come," said Carol Manson.

And in that little phrase she revealed to anyone who might have been listening the principal motive-music of her existence to date.

Carol Manson was Professor Manson's niece, which accounted for Anthony's release from his day's work. Motherless since the age of seven, the only child of Sir George Manson, chairman of Associated Airways Limited, and blessed with good looks far above the ordinary, Carol Manson had seldom had even to argue about getting her own way. On the occasion of Empire Air Day she was just three weeks past her 19th birthday, blonde, grey-eyed, slim, and as well-dressed as a girl can be in England. There was an understanding — not an engagement, because Sothorn had no money apart from his job, and because she was still so young — between her and her uncle's secretary.

Carol sometimes wondered what motive she had for coming to that understanding, apart from curiosity. This was one of the times when that wonder was acutely emphasized. Carol liked Anthony Sothorn a great deal. She liked his looks, the perfection of the pose with which he faced the world, the seriousness with which he took his job, his undoubted affection for herself. But she did not love him, and she knew it. At least did she know it? Love was so far to Carol Manson a book firmly closed. She had longed to open it. She had longed to that "arrangement" with Anthony just because she hoped to open it in the company of someone she knew well, and liked. But she had been disappointed. And she realized that it could not be very long before Anthony would have to be told. She felt that when she told him he might be tiresome. He could be very tiresome in his own essentially gentlemanly way — he was being tiresome now.

"But why did you want to come, Carol?" Anthony persisted.

They were sitting in Sir George's newest car—a huge black sports two-seater, which Carol drove with a certain desperate brilliance. Few of the passengers by failed glance twice at the exceptionally good-looking young couple in the exceptionally large and expensive car. More than a few recognized Carol Manson, who was a favourite with Press photographers.

"I should have thought you'd have had all the aeroplanes you wanted in the Home," said Anthony Sothorn.

"I didn't come to see 'planes,'" said Carol, who seemed entirely occupied in focusing a pair of field-glasses.

"Then what did you come to see?"

"Did you ever hear a proverb, Anthony, about curiously killing the cat?"

Sothorn lighted a cigarette.

"Of course if you get a kick out of making a mystery!" he muttered.

But Carol kept her temper, rather surprisingly perhaps.

"I'll tell you, if and when I spot him," she said.

"Rupert Larrimore, Tony."

"And who the deuce is Rupert Larrimore?"

Carol dropped the glasses into her lap and stared him.

"Are all scientists quite such dumb-bells?" she demanded, less of Sothorn than of the world at large.

"I take it," pursued Sothorn, quite unaffected, "that Mr. Larrimore has something to do with flying."

"You take — not only it, but the cake, the doings, and the works!" said Carol. "Don't you really remember, Tony? The man who was the first to fly the South Pacific solo from Valparaiso to Sydney? The man whose stunt exhibitions sent the States crazier than any man since Lindbergh?"

"I think I do remember the details," (To be continued)

Report Revolt In Abyssinia

ROME, May 29 — (Reuters) — A revolt in Abyssinia with large battles near Addis Ababa, in one of which 300 dead were left on the ground, was reported tonight in Italian newspapers.

According to the reports an attempt was made to ambush the Crown Prince of Abyssinia, Asfaou Ouassan, eldest son of Emperor Haile Selassie. The despatches, carried under a Djibouti (French Somaliland) dateline, reported that the rebellion broke out a few days ago. After one battle near the capital, government forces withdrew "to avoid causing a spreading of the revolt," the dispatches said.

On May 18, according to the reports, the rebels ambushed a military column which was to have included the Crown Prince.

But the Prince was not in the car which bore the royal insignia, and escaped the hail of machine-gun bullets which ripped into the back seats. The Prince's secretary, who was in the column, sent an immediate call for aid and royal troops rushed to the scene, between the capital and Dessie, and beat off the rebels.

Three hundred dead, many of them horribly mutilated, were said to have been left lying on the ground.

The reports were carried in most of Rome's newspapers, including the usually well-informed Messaggero.

It's an event, first, because it shows the increased use of Canadian bank services . . .

More deposit accounts: now over seven million.

More funds: customers' deposits now reach nearly seven billion dollars. More services: to farmers; to personal and small-business borrowers; to war pensioners; to people receiving Family Allowances.

It's an event, too, because of the kind of men and women who have joined our ranks. Eager to get ahead, they are finding in banking an interesting job, a challenging career. They can tell you how important privacy in banking is to the Canadian way of doing things.
