SMILES

GABBY GERTIE

"A stepper who goes the pace is usually given the gait."

VERY NICE
Bug: Oh, Mr. Worm, how nice of you to let me use you for a swing!

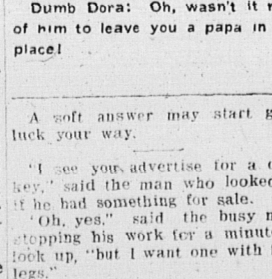

He: Sally is a good girl.
She: Yes, good at petting, maybe.

THESE AREN'T NO MORE
"Say Jimmy, what are the studies you have most in school?"
"Reading, writin', rhythmic and geography."

WAS LEFT A PAUPER
She: When my father died I was left a pauper.
Dumb Dora: Oh, wasn't it nice of him to leave you a papa in his place!

A soft answer may start good luck your way.
"I see your advertise for a donkey," said the man who looked as if he had something for sale.
"Oh, yes," said the busy man, stopping his work for a minute to look up, "but I want one with four legs."

CORNS

Quick safe relief

The most painful corns cease hurting the instant Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are applied. They strike at the cause of corns—pressing and rubbing of shoes. That's why they are permanent healing. If new shoes cause irritation, a Zino-pad stops it at once. Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are thin, medicated, antiseptic, protective. No liquids, no risk, no bother. Safe, sure, quick results guaranteed. At your druggist's or shoe dealer's.

CURSE O' LOVE

A Story of Love and Its Test

By MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 17

A QUANDARY

When Norma left Ada Lind and King Carson in the lounge she went up to her room and seated herself at the open window overlooking the sea.

The cool night breeze blew across her flushed and troubled face. She leaned her chin on her crossed arms on the window-sill and stared out over the undulating waters, beyond which lay the Orient. The Orient that sheltered somewhere, some place that night, the man she loved and wanted with all her soul.

But her mind was in a quandary. She looked to say to King Carson, "Go, go and bring my husband back to me!" And yet her pride held her back. To send for Philip, after he had let her deliberately, taking only one thoughtlessly uttered phrase of hers as his cue, seemed unthinkable.

Suppose, she thought, that Carson found him and forced him to return, whether he wished to or not. What a horrible situation for them all! And all her life she would doubt; she would never be quite sure whether Philip came of his own free will, or because his friend made him believe that he should do so.

It seemed to her that it was better to suffer as she was doing now than to risk that later and perhaps more, poignant suffering. The suffering that would come from living day after day, year after year in doubt. Time would, perhaps, ease her pain, but time would only add to the pain that might be her lot if Philip returned. Added to that would be also her doubt—indeed her conviction—that her husband had never loved her, but had married her for her money.

Her face burned anew with shame at that last thought, and she resolved that never, never, would she confess to King Carson, or to any one else, what she had learned from Sydney Stokes that bitter afternoon so many months before. Let Carson wait stubbornly, as he'd sworn to do, for her to send a message to Philip. She couldn't, she wouldn't do it!

But her resolve brought her no peace. She rested her forehead on her arms and cried. Her sense of loneliness, of having no one in all the world with whom to share her secret, brought the hot tears trickling over her soft bare arms and dropping, one by one, on the window-ledge.

"She didn't know how long she sat there, crying quietly in the darkness. But a timid knock at her door brought her to her feet, and she found that she was quite chilled.

"Who is it?" she called, dabbing futilely at her eyes before she went to open the door. It was Ada. "Norma opened the door and stood back in the shadow, lest Ada see her tear-streaked face.

"Oh, you're not ready to go to bed, yet?" asked Ada. "I thought I saw a light in your room and I—just wanted to say goodnight and tell you how—how very much I like you, Mr. Carson. We had a beautiful evening."

In spite of her own unhappiness, Norma smiled and reached out to pat the little widow's plump arm. "I'm so glad. He's such a very charming fellow. But you mustn't let him fall in love with you," she added, "because he's frightfully irresponsible—a rolling stone who goes around the world breaking hearts. I firmly believe, although my—my husband said no."

Even in the dim light from the corridor she could see Ada blush at the flattery of the suggestion. "As if I could fall in love with any man who's years and years younger than myself!" Ada laughed self-consciously.

"It's been done, you know," Norma pointed out a little wearily. To her surprise, Ada flung her arms suddenly around her neck and kissed her, whispering: "Oh, my dear, you're so sweet, and you've given me such a happy time, letting me pretend I'm young again, that life hasn't really passed me by. I know I'm foolish, and I ought to be sitting quietly by a fireside, knitting, but, if you were my age, and if you'd never lived at all, you'd understand."

"I think I do understand," Norma assured her. "I'm sure I do."

"One thing more," Ada wrapped her mantilla more closely around her and prepared to say good night. "Don't make a mistake about Mr. Carson. Trust him. He wants to help you, and I know that he can. What! this whole affair, but take my advice, my dear, and don't wreck your life through a sense of pride or obstinacy. Love is too precious and comes too seldom to be risked."

"She made a little gesture of farewell and went on down the corridor to her own room, and Norma dropped wearily into bed, but not to sleep.
