PEACE

What was the first prophetic word that rang down the starry sky the angels sang.

And what was the last word the Master said, that parting night when they broke brother-bread.

And yet behold: near twice a thousand still the battle-wrath, the grief, the tears.

Let mercy speed the hour when swords shall cease. And men cry back to God, "There shall be peace."

He stood upon the world's broad threshold wide. The din of battle and of slaughter rose.

The lines are James Russell Lowell's; the subject Wendell Phillips. In 1834 this distinguished Bostonian was graduated from Harvard Law School and admitted to the Massachusetts bar.

From the window of his law office in 1835, he saw a group of "gentlemen of property" gathered in Washington and State streets intent upon breaking up a meeting of anti-slavery ladies and in "snaking out" the English anti-slavery champion, Thompson.

However, it was not until 1837 that his real power of oratory were discovered. This was the year that the abolitionist, Elijah P. Lovejoy, was martyred in Alton, Illinois.

William Ellery Channing, the eminent divine and author, was resolved that the freedom loving people of Boston should have a chance to express their sentiments in an hour so deeply portentous in the history of freedom.

The hall was well filled and the grave Dr. Channing made an eloquent address. The meeting proceeded smoothly enough until the Attorney General, James T. Austin, rose from his place in the audience and began to berate the cause of the meeting.

Although death is the common terminus of all humanity, we are saddened by its visitation, because it severs in this life all the dearest and fondest ties of family life.

The decease of Mrs. Catherine McDonald of Kelly's Cross at the old homestead, which she entered as a bride 73 years ago, leads to this train of thought.

Had she lived until May she would have completed 83 years of life in this world. She was quite active till about a year or two ago, but during the past winter her vitality gradually waned and at 3 o'clock on Saturday morning, Feb. 23, she peacefully passed to her eternal reward.

His words were greeted with applause. Abolitionists rejoiced that they had found a champion fitted to maintain their cause in the presence of any emergency.

Later in his life he became an earnest champion of temperance and the advocate of prohibition. He was also foremost among those seeking the ballot for women.

It is with feelings of profound regret that we chronicle the death of Mr. Lawrence Campbell of Parramure Island which took place on Sunday morning, Feb. 18th.

Although the deceased had been in failing health, suffering from diabetes for the past few years he was always able to do about his light work, even till two days previous to his death.

Left to mourn the loss of a loving husband and kind father are his wife, and three sons, Oscar, Cornelius and Francis all at home, his only daughter Bertha having passed away six years ago at the early age of three years.

Following is the standing of Glen Valley School for January and February: Grade X-1, Frances MacDowell; 2, Irwin Blonden; 3, Myrtle Blonden.

What Every Widow Knows!

CHAPTER 18 MIDNIGHT REFLECTIONS

Never did dance seem so long to woman as the particular dance in which Molly Benedict was forced to go on waiting with the over-ardent Clarence.

He chattered volubly of his gratitude for the dance. "You're as easy to dance with as you are to look at," he confided as they neared Jimmie's table.

"When you're at liberty, Mr. Collins," as he had whirled past that menacing martinet.

"The fastest waltz I ever whirled through," she began lightly. "Jimmie—you and I are staid old parties compared to the young generation."

Jimmie said nothing. He was trying to control his justifiable anger. "Don't sulk, Jimmie," she begged, "and eat your guinea, hen's breast before it chills—"

"They went back to finish their supper, both of them heartily wishing that it was over.

But it was not until her cloak was about her, and she stood waiting for Jimmie to summon his borrowed limousine that Molly's sense of humor came back to her.

He helped her into the car, clearing his throat as he began with his best elderly brother air.

"Not cross, Molly, just—annoyed," he said. "He's not fit company for a girl like you and a dance is a fair thing."

Molly thought of Clarence's warm embrace and restrained a wild desire to murmur, "I'll say it!" instead, she interpolated, very briskly.

In Memoriam

MRS. CATHERINE McDONALD

Although death is the common terminus of all humanity, we are saddened by its visitation, because it severs in this life all the dearest and fondest ties of family life.

The decease of Mrs. Catherine McDonald of Kelly's Cross at the old homestead, which she entered as a bride 73 years ago, leads to this train of thought.

Had she lived until May she would have completed 83 years of life in this world. She was quite active till about a year or two ago, but during the past winter her vitality gradually waned and at 3 o'clock on Saturday morning, Feb. 23, she peacefully passed to her eternal reward.
