TALES TOLD BY MEN IN THE FIGHTING LINES

Writing home to his friends in Scotland, a naval engineer, says: "Since my last letter I have been having a yarn with some of the chaps who had the honor of being tickled by the famous Zeppelins. From all I can hear every man Jack of them is convinced that the Kaiser is putting his money on the wrong horse. They are not taking them cheaply, but just 'coolly.' They have had some Zeppelin, and they are ready for more any day. Apart from the irreverent remark advanced by one wag aboard here that the Kaiser believes in the Zeppelins because they are great gas-bags 'like himself, not one of our boys who were up against them can find justification for the Kaiser's faith. I am speaking for the Zeppelins as a weapon of offence against the navy—against ships under weigh in open water.

"The opinion of those who have seen the big airships at work, and out with a desire to do damage if they could, is that they will fall every time against the Kaiser's faith. I am speaking for the Zeppelins as a weapon of defence against the navy—against ships under weigh in open water.
